Soviets Crack Enemy Lines; Nazis Now Face Major Defeat

Germans Growing Nervous Over Gigantic Assaults

LONDON, May 9 (Sunday) (AP).—Russian troops pouring through an elaborate defence belt girding Novorossisk today threatened to inflict a staggering defeat on Axis Caucasus forces and produce another debacle in quick succession to the Allied triumph in Tunisia.

The midnight Moscow communique recorded by the Soviet monitor disclosed that a co-ordinated Russian infantry, artillery and air offensive had smashed an intricate German network of pillboxes, dugouts and other well-prepared fortifications within nine miles of the key port.

Furious German resistance was overwhelmed in this steady advance which aimed to throw the Axis troops into the Black Sea and recover the narrow fringe of the Taman Peninsula opposite the Crimea.

Russian airmen, many flying American planes, and Red artillery paved the way for the assaulting infantry beating at the outer doors of Novorossisk, former home of the Soviet Black Sea Fleet. The bulletin said twenty-one German planes were shot down at a cost of nine Russian aircraft.

Another Moscow announcement recorded by the Soviet monitor disclosed the proportions of the Russian aerial offensive. It said that on Friday the Red airmen destroyed or damaged 190 German planes compared to sixty-two Soviet craft lost.

German dispatches reflected a growing nervousness over the mighty Russian onslaught. The High Command in Berlin claimed earlier that the Russians had been repulsed in "violent hand-to-hand fighting" northeast of Novorossisk, but acknowledged that the Russian power was increasing.

Late last night the Berlin radio in a broadcast recorded by Reuter's indicated that Red Army amphibious forces now are entering the struggle. The German station said 300 troop barges had pushed into the lush

De Valera Stresses Friendship Need

LIMERICK, Eire, May 8 (AP).—Prime Minister Eamon de Valera, opening the Government Party election campaign today, urged the retention of a strong administration and stressed the necessity of amicable relations with Great Britain. He said all quarrels between Britain and Ireland had been removed "with the exception of one outstanding matter" (presumably the Northern Ireland question). De Valera said he believed "statesmanship in Ireland and Britain would bring about a solution of that remaining quarrel also." He did not amplify.

Output to Be Greater Than Ever

(Special to The Colonist)

OTTAWA, May 8.—When Canada's new programme of war production, for which extensive preparations are now under way, gets into full swing, the Dominion's output will be greater than ever and will require the country's full resources in labor and material, it is indicated by heads of the Munitions and Supply Department and the Labor Department.

While plans for the major change-over in the Dominion's war industrial output are still in the tentative stage, it is obvious that temporary unemployment of workers will result in a considerable scale in many parts of Canada. National Selective Service and Munitions authorities are planning to hold the labor dislocation to the minimum. At the same time the shuffle in arms and munitions output will be effected with greatest possible speed in order to meet the new needs rapidly.

Biggest feature of the major changes planned will probably be slackening of gun and munitions production and an increase in building of naval escort vessels, cargo ships and airplanes. Making of tanks in Canada has already been discontinued and big plants formerly engaged on this work will soon be turning out large and small parts equipment of freighters, warships and planes.

TACKLED WITH ENERGY, FORETHOUGHT

The virtual revolution in industrial war output will be the biggest development in Canadian industry since the Dominion's great war production network was built up. The problem is being tackled with the same energy and forethought that brought such amazing results in armament and munitions manufacture during the first three and a half years of the war.

Until the needs of China, Russia and other United Nations are ascertained and transportation ar-

French Cry And Cheer At Bizerte

Americans Find Big Seaport in Ruins

By HAROLD V. BOYLE

BIZERTE, Tunisia, May 8 (AP).—American tankmen who led the triumphant march into this great Mediterranean seaport Friday had to remove the flowers strewn on their vehicles by the happy French inhabitants before they could fire at a few German guns which challenged them from the opposite side of the city.

"The French people still in the town told our men the Germans left three-day time-bombs in some places," said Lieutenant Stuart Nixon, of 116 N. New Hampshire Street, Los Angeles, behind whose reconnaissance half-track this writer rode in a jeep to the outskirts of the city where we were halted by artillery fire.

"It looks like hell itself," said Captain Richard L. Downing, of Norman, Okla., signal officer who entered the city in the first jeep to follow the armored column. With him was Corporal Irving S. Stake, of Worcester, Mass.

"The town is in ruins and looks blasted to pieces," Downing said. "It

U.S. Senators Revise Plan

Ride Roughshod Over Own Leaders

WASHINGTON, May 8 (AP).—Riding roughshod over the opposition of Treasury experts and its own leaders, the Senate Finance Committee voted thirteen to seven approval today of a Ruml-flavored "pay-as-you-go" tax bill, excusing either the 1942 or 1943 taxes—whichever is lower—of all persons with net incomes.

Five Democrats combined with eight Republicans to send to the Senate floor a revised version of the Ruml-Carlson measure which was rejected by a four-vote margin in the House and called "inequitable" by Randolph Paul, Treasury general counsel.

The amended bill came out of the committee over the futile opposition of Democratic Leader Barkley, of Kentucky, and Chairman George (D.-Ga.). Members said it was the first time in many years a majority had overruled both the Democratic leader and the chairman on revenue legislation.

George expressed hope that Senate debate would begin Tuesday or Wednesday. He said he expected passage of the measure in some form by next week-end but would not predict how long it would take to compose differences with the House, where Rep. Doughton (D.-N.C.), chairman of the House conferees, opposes the principles involved in the Senate bill.

The House, after rejecting the Ruml-Carlson bill, passed the Forand-Robertson measure excusing the 6 per cent normal tax and 12 per cent first bracket surtax, thus providing abatement for only a part instead of virtually all taxpayers as does the Senate bill.

Victoria Buyers Respond Slowly To Loan Appeal

Greater Halifax kept its lead of more than one and one-half million dollars over Greater Victoria in subscriptions to the Fourth Victory Loan, it was announced by loan headquarters here last night. The Maritime city has raised $5,904,450 to date.

With only one week left in the inter-city loan competition, and Canadian-wide campaign, purchasers of the Greater Victoria area must subscribe another $2,760,950 to the loan to meet the quota of $7,080,000. Total subscriptions are $4,319,050.

Detailed returns from Vancouver Island centres are as follows:

Steel Workers Against Lewis

CHICAGO, May 8 (AP).—Representatives of about 100,000 C.I.O. steel workers in the Chicago area loudly approved a resolution denouncing John L. Lewis today, while their national president, Philip Murray, renewed his pledge that steel workers would not strike until the war was won.

"Poor administration and lack of control of prices have created national confusion," he said. "American labor wants no special privileges during the war. It is making sacrifices. But it demands equality of sacrifice in the United States of America.

"And no one should be permitted to get rich at the expense of the national war effort. A man that gets rich in this war is just as dirty, just as filthy, just as reprehensible as the dirtiest Japanese our soldiers have to fight."

Japanese Take New Positions

NEW DELHI, India, May 8 (AP).—Japanese forces advancing despite substantial casualties have occupied new positions threatening the British lines in the Buthedaung area of Western Burma, the British announced today.

Both R.A.F. and American bombers meanwhile pounded Japanese installations and troop concentrations in Burma.

Enemy Bombers Over England

LONDON, May 8 (AP).—The Air and Home Ministries issued this communique tonight:

Early this morning some six enemy bombers crossed the southeast and east coast of England. Three or four of them approached the London area.

Bombs were dropped at a few places in Essex, Hertfordshire and Kent, causing little damage.

A small number of people were injured.

Two of the enemy bombers were destroyed.

All Russia Hails Triumph of Allied Forces in Tunisia

MOSCOW, May 8 (AP).—The fall of Tunis and Bizerte was hailed enthusiastically in Moscow and raised fresh hopes for the early opening of a second front in Europe. The radio gave the first news of the United Nations victory in Africa and newspapers followed with stories of the crushing defeat for the Axis. Lines before newsstands were sometimes more than a block long and Red Army men were prominent in the lines.

The Moscow radio and Tass News Agency distributed the news to every province so that by nightfall all the millions in Russia will know the story.

In general conversation the fate of the Axis Army in Tunisia was compared with that of the Hitler divisions trapped and slashed to pieces by the Russians before Stalingrad.

Vermashev, writing in the Government newspaper Izvestia, expressed the opinion "Hitler could not send strong forces to Africa—the conditions of the Soviet-German front did not permit him to do it," and said that the clearing of Tunisia undoubtedly would open the way for the invasion of the European Continent by the Allies.

BULLETINS

LONDON, May 9 (Sunday) (AP).—The Russian Government has approved formation of a Polish division on Soviet soil to join the Red Army in the struggle against the Germans, Moscow said today in a broadcast recorded by the Soviet monitor.

MOSCOW, May 9 (Sunday) (AP).—Premier Joseph Stalin last night sent his congratulations to President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill on the "brilliant victory" in Tunisia, and said, "I wish you further successes."

Three Blasts In Gibraltar Bay Mystify

LA LINEA, Spain, May 8 (AP).—Three violent explosions of unexplained origin in Gibraltar Bay at 6 o'clock this morning killed four persons and injured six, it was reported tonight.

After the explosions British naval tugs beached three merchant ships in the harbor.

Reports that Axis submarines had made an attack went without confirmation throughout the day.

ATHLONES AT SEATTLE

SEATTLE, May 8 (AP).—The Earl of Athlone, Governor-General of Canada, and his wife, Princess Alice, arrived in Seattle today on their return trip to the Dominion after a five-day tour of the Pacific Northwest war industries and military installations. They boarded a ship and were to return to British Columbia Sunday morning.

Oppose Food Price Subsidy

Angry Protests From U.S. Congressmen

WASHINGTON, May 8 (AP).—The Administration's plan to use subsidy payments to cut retail food prices drew angry protests today from surprised members of Congress, along with intimations of legislative action to halt the move.

Influential lawmakers said the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, previously denied by Congress the subsidy authority to be exercised now, would receive a cool reception, if and when it seeks additional funds.

Under the plan, the retail prices of meat, coffee and butter would be rolled back on an average of 10 per cent, effective June 1, with the R.F.C. granting subsidies to processors, designed to free them from a price squeeze between producers and consumers.

Bluntly asserting that the action would "harm rather than help" the war effort, Chairman Cannon (D., Mo.), of the House appropriations committee, expressed belief that the act creating the R.F.C. could be amended to ban subsidy payments.

"MOST INFLATIONARY THING TO DO"

From Rep. Taber (R., N.Y.), the appropriations committee's ranking minority member, came the declaration: "This is the most inflationary thing they could do. It is the reverse of a sales tax at a time when a sales tax is needed to curb inflation."

"Roll back prices," he added, "and people, with their increased purchasing power, will buy much they don't need. I never warm up to these subsidy programmes, because they just pile up debt. I don't know how far the President can go without coming to Congress for more money."

Rep. Dirksen (R., Ill.), a leader of the farm bloc, predicted a Congressional effort to block the subsidy programme, and argued that "once you start a subsidy programme, you can never stop them."

Obviously irate, Chairman Steagall (D., Ala.) recalled that the House banking committee, which handles R.F.C. legislation, had rejected an amendment setting forth a similar plan "when it was offered under the guise that it would increase production."

FOUR AIRMEN KILLED

POCATELLO, Idaho, May 8 (AP).—Four men were killed in the crash today in Northeastern Arizona of a four-engined army bomber en route from Biggs Field, El Paso, Texas, to the army air base here. Public relations officers said the plane was manned by a four-man ferry crew and all aboard were killed. Names were withheld pending notification of next of kin.

AIRMEN RESCUED AFTER MONTHS ON ICE CAP

Death or Capture Now Only Choice of Nazis

Nazis Won't Admit Loss Of Tunisia

By The Associated Press

Germany insisted last (Saturday) night that Axis resistance in Tunisia had not yet broken down, while Italy announced bluntly that Tunis and Bizerte had fallen to Allied forces which, the Rome radio said, outnumbered Axis troops ten to one.

A Berlin broadcast, recorded by The Associated Press, failed to mention the two important strongholds captured by the Allies Friday, but declared:

"Several large Axis fighting groups are continuing their stubborn resistance in the coastal area where they are still able to operate from a common base in connection with another large fighting group in the area between Zaghouan to Enfidaville and further south in communication with other centres of resistance."

The broadcast said the British First Army and American Fifth Army "must pay for territorial gains eastward with the fiercest and most costly fighting yet experienced in Africa."

"Everywhere the fighting develops at the closest range, tank against tank, gun against gun and man against man," the broadcast went on.

ATTEMPT TO EASE BLOW OF DEFEAT

In an earlier broadcast, the Berlin radio attempted to ease the blow of defeat by quoting the Dagsposten of Stockholm as saying editorially, "Invasion of England is not out of the question. There might be mass attacks by air and with U-boats with, perhaps, new and terrible weapons."

The newspaper was quoted as saying that "Great Britain's posititon is so desperate that an Allied invasion of Europe cannot be postponed any longer and the Allied invasion may be expected in the west, but hardly in the south of Europe."

The Rome radio quoted the Italian communique as saying the Allies "overcame heroic Axis resistance at Tunis and Bizerte with crushing and overwhelming strength."

A Berlin broadcast quoted an Italian army organ, Le Forze Armate, as saying that total losses of the Italian Army on all fronts up to April 30 of this year were 46,193 killed and 113,736 wounded.

Japanese on Attu Blasted

Heaviest Bombing of War by U.S. Planes

WASHINGTON, May 8 (AP).—Army heavy and medium bombers and swift fighter planes on Thursday gave Japanese troops on Attu Island their heaviest aerial pounding of the war, the Navy disclosed today. It consisted of seven raids launching an expanded air offensive in the North Pacific.

At the same time Warhawk fighter planes, doubling as light bombers, blasted installations on Kiska Island, Japan's main base in the Aleutians, in five raids. A communique said "direct hits were scored on enemy positions."

The Attu assaults were made by Mitchell twin engine craft and Lightning fighters. "Hits were scored in all target areas and several fires were started."

Until Thursday Attu, westernmost of the Aleutians and 233 nautical miles beyond the American base on Amchitka, had been the target of only occasional attacks. Kiska is only sixty-three nautical miles west of Amchitka, whose new American air base was announced by the Navy yesterday.

Escape From Africa Cut Off as Estimated 120,000 Are Encircled

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN NORTH AFRICA, May 8 (AP).—Remnants of the beaten Axis African Army, devoid of supply bases and air support, were herded along the bomb-ridden roads skirting the Gulf of Tunis today toward Cap Bon Peninsula, with Allied armor and infantry in a relentless pursuit which will end only when the last Axis soldier in Africa is dead or captured.

Dawn found stubborn Axis pockets of resistance still fighting on isolated hill positions after the streets of Tunis and Bizerte had been cleared, but the enemy was not expected to be able to put up any real delaying action except possibly in the mountains and at the base of Cap Bon Peninsula.

As other Allied troops chased the shattered enemy forces into the peninsula, American armored units smashed to the Gulf of Tunis to cut off all escape for Axis forces in Northernmost Tunisia. Prisoners were counted by the thousands.

Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower and Gen. Henri Giraud participated in a ceremony marking the formal presentation of American lend-lease equipment to the French today, and the Allied commander-in-chief said:

"Now that the only Axis soldiers left on African soil soon will be in their graves or in prison camps, let us set our hearts and minds on complete victory so that we may march with this equipment up Champs Elysees to the Arc de Triomphe, where lies the Unknown Soldier's symbol of French heroism."

AMERICANS CUT COASTAL HIGHWAY

Cashing in on the capture of Tunis and Bizerte, the Americans cut the coastal highway between the two cities at a point eighteen miles south of Bizerte, and the British captured Creteville, fourteen miles southeast of Tunis on the northern side of the base of Cap Bon Peninsula.

There, only twenty-five miles from the port of Hammamet on the southern side of the peninsula's base, British armor threatened to bottle up the main body of enemy forces in their last refuge on the African continent.

The Second United States Army Corps, operating under a new commander, captured Chougui, twenty-one miles west of Tunis, and pressed on against enemy rearguards. The Allies held Chougui Pass, which guards the road to the junction of Tebourba.

The Nineteenth French Corps occupied Pont du Fahs, and British armored forces quickly took over three towns between that anchor of the enemy's southern front and Medjez-El-Bab—Ksar Tyr, Ain El-Asker and Bir M'Cherga.

With the Allied offensive less than seventy-two hours old, a spokesman said the number of enemy prisoners captured in this terrific push alone would total "many thousands," and there were indications that it would go beyond 10,000.

ESTIMATE 120,000 SOLDIERS SURROUNDED

The Algiers radio said in a broadcast recorded in London by The Associated Press that an estimated 120,000 Axis soldiers were encircled.

Thus began the final phase of the Tunisian campaign, a battle of annihilation which Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower promised would last "as long as a single armed German is on African soil."

Eisenhower disclosed for the first

From Europe Day by Day—

THE TIMES, London News and Comment on International Events selected from The Times daily and published in The Daily Colonist by special arrangement with The Vancouver Daily Province.

(Copyright, 1943, by Southam Co.)

LONDON, May 8.—The British First Army, aided by overwhelming air power, has captured Tunis, and Moroccan irregular cavalry, followed by United States troops, have entered Bizerte naval base. The campaign in North Africa is drawing to a swift, dramatic conclusion.

The victorious offensive, says The Times' military correspondent, has followed its inevitable course. Once the British First Army's powerful tanks and armored vehicles reached the Tunisian plain its overwhelming strength made victory certain. Its advance cut the Axis forces in two and smashed the Nazi tanks so badly there was little they could do but retreat and retreat again.

All that is now left the Nazis are a few airfields in the hilly country south of Cape Bon. Here they can not hope to make much of a stand, and escape by sea is virtually cut off by the navy and Royal Air Force.

Editorially, The Times says the British First Army, after delays, checks and disappointments, has struck the final, decisive blow and won a great victory. The United States Corps did well in capturing Ferryville. It, too, has undergone a bitter apprenticeship to modern war. It has emerged hardened and experienced.

The air offensive has been the greatest known in Africa. It has ranged from the battlefield over Sicily and Southern Italy, and losses to enemy shipping have been crushing for the army that depended for everything on carriage by sea or air.

There is every prospect now, adds The Times, the Germans will lose heavily in men and machines. Damage to the Luftwaffe and to Axis shipping will affect the whole course of the war.

Disasters also have overtaken the German troops in Kuban, where they are now divided as between the Kuban River and Novorossisk, and the troops have been ordered, in desperation, to stand or die.

The Red Air Force continues supreme in the air, and Red artillery has blasted the Germans from many strongpoints. Russian long-range bombers are attacking Dnieprepetrovsk, Kremenchug and Bryansk, behind the enemy lines in the Ukraine.

There is no truth in the report that United States Flying Fortresses are operating in Russia. Soviet factories are turning out plenty of long-distance bombers for the Red Air Force, and, anyway, Fortresses are useful only for day bombing.

The Royal Air Force's offensive against continental traffic, says The Times' aeronautical correspondent, has reached the point where the Germans are not able to effect repairs until weeks have elapsed. So many locomotives have been wrecked that the Nazis now are using anti-aircraft artillery on trucks attached to freight trains.

The enemy is forced to use barges and coastal ships to make up for lack of railway transport.

Dunkerque to Cap Bon!

AT Dunkerque our hopes were in the cellar. The Low Countries had fallen. France was falling back in confusion. The British First Army had fought its way out of a double-sided trap in deeds of heroism that have become an epic of this war. There, on the shallow beaches of Dunkerque, 330,000 men were saved and at the eleventh hour. Yesterday, the British First Army was in Tunis, a hard-hitting part of United Nations' forces that were driving the same enemy towards Cap Bon, the German Dunkerque. Some 2,500 airplanes on individual missions hovered over the enemy. Forty-seven vessels were sunk between North Africa and Italy. The debacle mounted, neared its smashing climax. Yet, the United Nations would never have got to Cap Bon without united, willing purpose. That same determination, in preparation for stiffer obstacles, is needed now from every earning adult in Canada. Here at home, we must back the men who are fighting—and winning—this war, so that all mankind will be free. It is not much to ask that we save for victory. Buy Victory Bonds today! Get into the fight!

Enemy Troop Ship Is Sunk

Allied Bomber Downs Japanese Transport

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN AUSTRALIA, May 9 (Sunday) (AP).—A small transport, its decks and superstructure congested with Japanese troops, was fired and sunk yesterday in the second straight day of heavy Allied air attacks on Madang, New Guinea.

Three bomb hits from mast height sent the ship to the bottom near Madang's fine harbor on New Guinea's north coast, and another bomb hit started a small cargo vessel to sinking.

The enemy showed more aerial opposition than it had in recent weeks, sending up thirteen fighters to oppose Allied medium bombers and long-range fighters. No Allied losses were reported, but one of the Japanese interceptors was downed, two more damaged and another destroyed on the ground.

Washington Fears Meat Shortage

YAKIMA, Wash., May 8 (AP).—Warning that a meat famine is in prospect in the State of Washington, the Washington livestock and meat industry, meeting in Yakima today urged strict control of black market operations and pledged efforts for the increase of livestock feeding.

O. E. Joseph, of Seattle, chairman of the meeting, said shortage of labor, high cost of feed and fear of losses under rapidly changing government regulations vitally affect the livestock industry.

Greater Output

rangements gauged for delivery to all war fronts, details of the Canadian switch-over cannot be worked out. But the shift is expected to get under way within the next few months and to continue throughout this Summer and Fall. By early 1944, it is planned, Canada will be in full stride on all phases of the new industrial war effort.

There are three major causes for the new situation confronting Canada in the realm of war production. First of these is the tremendous success of Canada's industrial war expansion and the resulting huge production. By international arrangement half of Canada's output has been for army equipment. Canadian production has helped to build up a big surplus of many lines which will have to be discontinued or decreased. Even with a European offensive in prospect many lines of army requirements are in stock in quantities to fill requirements for months ahead.

Second is the shipping problem, now intensified by the tremendous Axis submarine efforts to knock out United Nations' supply lines including the North Atlantic route to Europe.

EMPHASIS ON SMALLER TYPES

Output of escort ships has not kept pace with cargo boat construction. Emphasis is now to be put on naval vessels, especially smaller types most effective in convoy protection and sub-hunting as well as on output of faster type freighters. Labor, materials and factory facilities formerly used in other production will be switched to shipbuilding. As shipping conditions improve big stocks of war equipment in America can be more readily moved overseas.

Third major factor is the changing character of the land war. Emphasis in the early years was on tanks and similar armored equipment. Fighting in Africa has demonstrated that tank defences have reached an effective stage and mobile infantry and artillery, together with devastating air power are assuming new importance. This calls for readjustment in ground equipment production.

TO PRESENT SEVERE PROBLEMS

The readjustment period, it is indicated will present severe problems. While retooling and re-equipment of factories is in progress, lay-offs will probably be considerable. Plans are under way for temporary use of those thrown out of work but as yet no estimate is possible of the numbers to be affected.

Meantime it is possible that there will be some relaxation in restrictions against some items of civilian requirement, notably farm machinery. One major difficulty is that some plants engaged in work which must be discontinued cannot be completely changed over to new production because later, further supplies of their original output may be needed. For the same reason workers skilled in present output must, in some instances, be held available to resume the jobs they will temporarily have to abandon. This will be met to some extent by training them for new work in the same plants so that both men and machines will be available if resumption of former output is required.

movements are restricted, except by those who file with the Secretary of State and advertise in newspapers three weeks.

Harold Scoville, county attorney, reported a dentist called him about the law, explaining that a Japanese-American had come to his office with an aching tooth. The dentist wanted to know if he could pull it.

"I had to tell him," Scoville said, "that if he lived up to the letter of the law he would have to advertise three weeks first."

SEATTLE, May 8 (AP).—The voluntary return of 819 former lumber workers during April to jobs in the woods in Washington State, in response to an urgent Government appeal, was reported today by Otto S. Johnson, State director of the U.S. Employment Service.

He said several hundred workmen had done the same in Oregon, but the response still was short of the urgent need for 4,000 new lumber workers in the Pacific Northwest.

Say Greatest War in History to Come With Invasion of Europe

Millions of Men, Blanket of Planes

Two Associated Press correspondents, one in Stockholm and the other in London, have received information recently giving a remarkably similar picture of the form to be taken by Allied invasion of Europe. One, however, finds that the Allies require more time for preparation. [illegible] Neither minimizes the cost of retaking Hitler's "fortress Europe," no matter when it comes.

By JAMES M. LONG
Associated Press Staff Writer

LONDON, May 8 (AP).—Invasion of Europe from the west, perhaps the most dramatic prospect of the Allied comeback, seems to observers on this British springboard of attack to be a certainty.

But the relatively widespread feeling in North America that invasion forces virtually are poised at the zero hour is not reflected here.

There is here a feeling that more strength yet must be gathered for the blow. Weeks or months, rather than days, are expected to be required.

Multiply Dieppe tenfold, back it with 1,000,000 men poised to strike, blanket it with air power capable of sweeping the Luftwaffe from the coast and Channel skies—and that is the probable pattern of invasion when it does come.

The multiple Dieppes, unofficial observers here believe, will be conducted simultaneously at the best beachheads from North Cape to the Eastern Mediterranean.

RUSSIA IN EAST DIVERSION SOUTH

It may be supported by a Russian offensive from the East and accompanied by diversionary attacks into Southern Europe.

An examination of the map and a recheck of past commando operations show these obvious landing-place possibilities:

1. Ostend, Calais and Boulogne, closest beachheads to England; Dieppe, barriers of which have been tested, and Le Havre. Their advantage is their nearness, allowing heavier air cover and swift troop crossings in countless relays of small landing craft. It is only twenty miles from England to Calais, sixty-seven to Dieppe and 105 to Le Havre. Their disadvantage is that there the German coastal defences reputedly are the strongest and deepest.

2. Cherbourg and the Normandy Peninsula. Brest, Lorient, St. Nazaire and the Brittany Peninsula. It is eighty-eight miles to Cherbourg and 165 to Brest. The coast would protect both flanks as the Allies deepened their drive inland. Disadvantages are, again, the strength of long-prepared German defences, the greater width of France to be crossed before bringing the fight to German soil, and the treacherous currents off the Breton Coast.

In addition, there are the possibilities of co-ordinated attack on the Low Countries and North Sea coast of Germany—closest to Berlin of all bridgeheads. An attack on Norway—where the Germans are extended, but where a double water crossing would be necessary to follow on to German soil—is expected to clean up that flank and eliminate enemy submarine and airplane bases.

Invited to See Rome—And Live

NEW YORK, May 8 (AP).—The B.B.C. said today the Bey of Tunis had fled North Africa, accepting "an Italian offer to pay a friendly visit to Europe in order that he may see with his own eyes what is being accomplished by Italy in this war."

Most Miners Back at Work

Strike Over Fines Appears Lessening

PITTSBURGH, May 8 (AP).—A strike of nearly 2,000 coal miners in protest against $1-a-day fines for unauthorized work stoppages apparently was lessening in Ohio and Pennsylvania today as union leaders urged the men to return to their jobs.

John L. Lewis, international president of the United Mine Workers, replied "No comment" when asked in New York City about the strikes. His district officers generally expressed the hope of an early settlement. Fourteen hundred workers went back to the pits this morning at California, Pa.

is twice as bad at Mateur—and I thought that was one of the worst torn up places I ever saw. It is almost deserted. There are only a few French people left. They cheered us and some cried they were so happy. They all gave us the Victory sign with their fingers.

"Seven or eight ships were blown up in the harbor. The whole place is blown apart around the harbor."

AMERICAN PRESS "TAKES" TINDJA

The American Army took Bizerte and Ferryville, but a contingent of the American press took Tindja.

This little spot at the western side of Lake Achkel bears the same relation to Ferryville across the causeway between Lake Achkel and Lake Bizerte that Brooklyn does to Manhattan—Manhattan gets all the parades and so does Ferryville.

Just as the Tindja patriots were sadly thinking of putting their flags back in the moth balls down the road wove an army public relations jeep carrying four uniformed American war correspondents.

"Can you tell us the road to Bizerte, please," asked Graham Hovey, of International News Service, who was driving because no other correspondent in the car could.

A small boy who heard the query was the first to catch the significance to Tindja of this epochal visit and bawled out at the top of his lungs:

"Les Americans! Les Americans!"

Tindja patriots leaped to life as if they had stepped on an electric wire. Out came the flags and flowers showered the surprised correspondents.

"Vive les soldats Americains!" roared the little throng in a blast of welcome that shook Tindja.

"They think we are soldiers and saved them from the Nazis." I said while trying to break a stranglehold on an urchin who had leaped on the jeep.

"Well, who are we to tell all these people they are wrong?" asked Seymour Korman, of The Chicago Tribune, spitting out a carnation. "Didn't you always want to be here?"

FINDS KISSER ATE GARLIC

Just then a stout Frenchman embraced Dave Brown, of Bath, Me., Reuter's correspondent, pinioning his arms enthusiastically and planting two vigorous kisses on Brown's new mustache.

"I would be kissed by the only guy in town that ate garlic for lunch," said Brown, then shouted loyally:

"A la victoire!"

The Frenchman retired.

Rejoicing residents of Ferryville, little French port on Lake Bizerte, gave the key to the city to a conquering column of American tankmen—and they promptly used it to lock up captured remnants of the German army in the city hall.

More than 225 Nazi prisoners were herded through the streets to the white city hall—Hotel de Ville—while Frenchmen who no longer had to pay the German piper danced in the streets with joy. The whole town, from toddling children to aged granddames went literally mad with delight.

The capture of Bizerte itself later in the day was a comparative anticlimax to the flower-garlanded troops after the royal welcome they got at Ferryville.

Every American soldier was a king. Still wearing a dazed look from a trip through the city, Capt. Elgin Sanders, of Douglas, Ariz., and Cpl. Nathaniel Good, of El Paso, Tex., sat at the crossroads about two miles southwest of Ferryville in a jeep covered with flowers and with flowers sticking out of their helmets.

"One thousand and one people gave them to us," said Sanders. "Watch out when you go in there. They'll kiss you to death."

"Don't you think a man has more sense after he's married?"

"Yes, but it doesn't do him any good then."

time today that Maj.-Gen. Omar N. Bradley, fifty-year-old infantry officer, had succeeded Lieut.-Gen. George S. Patton, Jr., as commander of the Second United States Army Corps when the Americans were shifted to the north, April 17, for the showdown scrap.

Although the commander-in-chief praised both American generals, there was nothing in his statement to indicate the present whereabouts of Patton, a specialist in armored warfare.

Bradley was placed in command because the new zone of operations in the north made it essentially an infantry fight, it was said.

After today's new gains, the front now consists of an arc in the north held by the Americans, running from Bizerte to a point two miles northwest of Protville, then eastward toward the coast. South of Tunis the wedge front is approximately on a line from Tunis to Point du Fahs, then southeast to Ben Saidan, east to Saoual, and thence to a point on the coast ten miles north of Enfidaville. An additional wedge was driven fourteen miles from Tunis along the road running southeastward along the Gulf of Tunis.

Vast stocks of booty were reported captured by the Red Army which now is attacking in the knowledge that the Axis has suffered a severe defeat in Africa as the prelude to a European invasion by the Allies in the West.

Four-Way Offensive On Circular Front

By JOHN COLBURN
Associated Press Staff Writer

STOCKHOLM, May 8 (AP).—From all sides come signs that early Summer may see the United Nations start on a four-way offensive to crack the walls of "fortress Europe" while Germany endeavors to smash Russia.

Indications point to the most extensive warfare in history in the coming months on the circular front extending from Russia around the North Cape shores in Norway, through the Lowland Countries, along the French coast to Bayonne on the Bay of Biscay, and in the Mediterranean against Italy and the Balkans.

From a mass of speculation, propaganda and facts, this is how the Summer campaign appears to be shaping up:

The Nazis are ready to try for the third Summer to defeat Russia, hoping their Atlantic submarine warfare will prevent any large-scale Allied offensive against the Western defences.

The decision to make Netherlands soldiers prisoners of war again is one of the many evidences of the fear that the Allies might have concentrated enough power and supplies in Great Britain to make an invasion.

REPORT FORCES MASS IN ICELAND

Gen. Nikolaus von Falkenhorst's recent inspection of Norway's defences came simultaneously with reports from Germany that the Allies were massing forces in Iceland to invade Finland in the vicinity of Petsamo, and thus get at Norway through the back door.

Such a move might be made in an effort to reduce the menace of submarine and plane attacks on Allied Russia-bound convoys.

The Nazis have been seeking more Finnish help, not only on the Leningrad front, but also in preparation for any invasion from the north. High Finnish officers, however, are reported to have said privately that few Finnish soldiers would obey if ordered to oppose an Allied invasion.

Elimination of German bases in Northern Norway would permit Britain to shift more of her fleet to the Atlantic anti-submarine fight and would drive out the remnants of the German navy which base in Norway's southern fjords. Norway is not considered here a possible base for invasion of Europe.

RUSSIANS COULD FORCE DELAYS

There have been reports that the Russians would employ delaying actions against the Germans until they could co-ordinate their own offensive with the Western invasion. This would force Hitler to split his forces and supplies and move them to two widely-separated major fronts over transport lines now being hammered continually from the air.

Meanwhile, the Allies, after cleaning the Axis out of Tunisia, may concentrate their Mediterranean forces on Italy in an effort to strike through Trieste to Austria.

That Hitler also fears Gen. Sir Henry Pownall's British Ninth and Tenth Armies may come up through the Balkans was seen in his recent conferences with the leaders of Bulgaria, Hungary and Rumania.

Britain Hoping for Big Invasion During Summer

Where and When Blows Will Fall Is Hitler's Worry, but Belief Is Decisive Phase Coming

LONDON, May 8 (AP).—A series of Summer assaults around the rim of Adolf Hitler's fortress from Norway to Greece—that's what the British expect to see after Tunisia. "It is well at this moment of great promise," The Daily Telegraph said this morning, "to recall that this African campaign was never anything more than a preliminary to bigger things."

Some of these next attacks may be feints. Some may have limited objectives.

But some will be the real thing.

That, at least, is Britain's hope—the hope, as The Telegraph said, that the African campaign "has been concluded at small enough cost to make possible a deep penetration of the European fortress this year."

Where and when the blows will fall is Hitler's worry, but neither he nor the British seem to doubt that this will be the decisive Summer of the war.

CONFERENCES MAY BE UNDER WAY

There was reason to believe in London that conferences for the final settlement of this decisive strategy had been arranged or are even partly under way.

This belief was bolstered by President Roosevelt's announcement that he was sending Joseph E. Davies, former United States Ambassador to Russia, to Moscow with a message for Premier Stalin.

Prime Minister Churchill's warning to the Germans against the use of gas has since been underscored by unofficial reports of German preparations, suggesting that Hitler is contemplating this method of warfare as a last desperate measure to terrorize his enemies—a measure which left them unmoved because of the undoubted mastery of the air.

That fact to many military observers overrides all other considerations, including the still unconquered U-boat threat.

The way in which Allied forces swept the Luftwaffe out of the Tunisian skies and the Axis soldiers out of Tunis and Bizerte is regarded as the happiest augury of Summer success.

From North Africa and Britain, this air offensive will be turned fuller than ever on Europe—against railways, factories, U-boat bases, troop concentrations, ports and defence works.

When the assault starts, there is no doubt that Britain will go hungrier than ever, as cargoes are converted from butter to guns—but land is generous in the Summer, and housewives as well as military observers hope the invasion will hit the U-boat nests first.

Quintuplets Will Launch Ships Today

Train Bearing Famous Sisters Is Derailed

SUPERIOR, Wis., May 8 (AP).—The special car carrying the Dionne quintuplets and their party was derailed in the Soo Line railroad yards today as it was being switched to the shipyards where the five famous little girls will officiate at the launching tomorrow of a quintette of cargo ships.

Aaron Litman, public relations director for the Walter R. Butler Shipbuilders, Inc., where the launching will take place, said the rear trucks of the Pullman in which the girls were riding dropped off the tracks while rounding a sharp curve.

Litman said no one was injured and that a wrecker quickly hoisted the car back on the tracks.

The quintuplets watched excitedly, as the ponderous crane on the wrecking train lifted their car into position.

The quints and their accompanying party arrived about twenty minutes behind schedule this morning and their appearance at the shipyards was delayed further by the mishap.

SLEEP IN SEPARATE ROOMS

For the first time in their nearly nine years the quintuplets slept in separate rooms last night, four of them occupying two compartments, while the fifth occupied another with her sister, Pauline.

Hon. A. St. Clair Gordon, Provincial Treasurer of Ontario, and Eugene Casey, executive assistant to President Roosevelt, will be among the score of North American statesmen, military, naval and maritime service officials on the stand when the world's most famous sisters swing their red, white and blue-jacketed bottles of water from the Niagara River to mark officially a world record for sidewise cargo ship launching.

The five vessels, named after early American Captains Moses Gay, Asa Eldridge, Gurdon Gates, Bailey Foster and Watson Ferris, are destined to fly the British Ensign under lend lease.

Which of the girls will open the ceremony at 2 p.m. (C.D.T.) is to be determined by lot. The other launchings will follow at forty-five-minute intervals.

Canada's First Parachute Troops Start Making Jumps

SHILO CAMP, Man., May 8 (CP).—Military authorities here said today members of Canada's first parachute battalion have started making "jumps" at the paratroop camp here, 110 miles west of Winnipeg.

First to land on Canadian soil was Lieut. John (Steamer) Hanson, twenty-five, of Westmount, Que., when he led a specially-chosen stick of airborne officers out of a huge transport plane in a test flight here last Tuesday.

The men recently came to this base after training last Winter at Fort Benning, Ga.

The first group to make the leap were Jumpmaster Capt. H. A. Farquier, of Toronto.

Actually the first to make the test jump was "Oscar," the 150-pound sandbag.

Then orders were rapped out: "Smokes out. Get ready. Stand up. Hook up. Check your equipment. Sound off."

HANSON "HITS THE SILK"

At the command "jump," Lieut. Hanson "hit the silk" and was followed by nine other troopers—the first Canadian paratroopers to descend on Canadian soil.

For Lieut. Hanson the jump was his thirtieth since joining the army shortly after the start of the war.

Others who took part in the jump were: Lieutenants R. M. (Bob) Baxter, of Winnipeg; H. M. (Chug) Walker, Canora, Sask.; W. R. (Russ) Hicks, Foam Lake, Sask., and R. O. McLean, Calgary.

The plane was piloted by Flt. Lt. C. H. P. Killick, R.C.A.F., who studied air-force co-operation with the battalion at Fort Benning. Co-pilot was Flt. Lt. T. E. Daniels, of Los Angeles.

Greatest Day Ever in Bond Sales Drive

OTTAWA, May 8 (CP).—Subscriptions in Canada's Fourth Victory Loan campaign have reached a total of $707,850,300 in the drive toward a $1,100,000,000 objective, it was announced at national headquarters today. This cumulative total compares with $564,863,750 subscribed at the corresponding stage of the third loan, which had an objective of $750,000,000.

The day's total was the highest daily figure ever recorded in a Canadian Victory Loan campaign. The highest previous total for a day was $70,672,850 on the eighteenth day of the third loan last Fall.

The cumulative total of subscribers at the close of business Friday evening was 916,619. This compares with 668,322 at the same stage of the last loan, an increase of 248,297.

Subscriptions yesterday amounted to $77,006,700, while for the corresponding day of the last loan the total was $54,883,750.

GREAT RESULTS FROM ARMY

First returns on bond subscriptions of $564,750 by Canadian Army units overseas brought the army's combined total of subscriptions at home and abroad to $8,301,650, or nearly three times as much as the entire army raised during the whole of the Third Victory Loan. The first cable from London, England, reported 4,910 applications.

Commenting on progress on the loan campaign among army units, Defence Minister Ralston said today that it was "with a great sense of personal pride in the Canadian Army" he received the news that all military districts and commands in Canada had now passed their objectives in the Fourth Victory Loan drive.

He said it proved again "the splendid spirit of army teamwork that exists from coast to coast," and added: "The flame of that spirit is brightened by Victory Loan returns from overseas."

"I would like," he added, "to congratulate all ranks of the Canadian Army on their fine achievement, and urge the army to carry on with continued zeal during the remaining week of the loan."

Victory Loan subscriptions by the army in Canada now stand at $7,736,900.

Protest Moving Indians to U.S.

ASHCROFT, May 8 (CP).—On grounds that Indians supply much of the labor in this district, the Ashcroft Ranchers' Association has protested the recent movement of Interior Indians to work for growers in the State of Washington.

The protest was made to E. Clark, of the National Selective Service Commission, at a meeting here. Ranchers suggested that Indians who have already crossed the border should be brought back, and that no more should be permitted to leave Canada.

Ranchers present said they were not prepared to engage conscientious objectors by the year, as required under Selective Service rules, since the seasonal nature of farmwork in this district calls for employment at certain periods of the year only.

Supporting Loan Drive

Bond Purchases Amount to $8,000

Making an appeal to the members to support to the fullest Canada's Fourth Victory Loan as a means of bringing the war to a quick and successful conclusion, Bill Bridgewood, president of the Victoria Aerie No. 92, F.O.E., addressed a gathering of 500 at the fourth annual banquet last night at the Eagles' Home, View Street.

"Your aerie," Mr. Bridgewood continued, "has invested $8,000 in War Bonds. In this time of emergency it is our duty as Eagles to do all we can to turn the wheel. Let us push and push hard," he said.

In outlining the work carried on by the A.R.P. section of the Victoria Aerie, President Bridgewood told of the equipping and building of an emergency ward, and said, "Let us as brothers keep up this humanitarian work for the good of the public in general." He reported that 573 new members were inducted into the order during the past year.

Dave Ecclar, representative of the State Aerie, spoke of the growth in the Port Alberni, Nanaimo, Ladysmith, Prince George aeries, and remarked how they have all gone over the top in their membership drives. He congratulated all of the lodges on their success.

Work of the social committee was outlined by Bill Cox, chairman, who thanked the members for their co-operation during the year.

Gnr. Charles Hovey, a professional artist before enlisting in the Canadian Army, sang two selections. Miss G. McLeod was the accompanist.

Dr. H. Clarke, past president, occupied the chair.

Dancing followed the dinner.

Plan to Raise Job Insurance Salary Limit

OTTAWA, May 8 (CP).—The top salary limit for coverage under the Unemployment Insurance Act will be raised from $2,000 to $2,400 a year if a bill prepared by the Labor Department becomes law.

Notice of the bill was given in the House of Commons order paper by Labor Minister Mitchell.

At present the act applies to those insurable who earn $2,000 a year or less. With overtime, cost-of-living bonuses and recent increases in certain wage scales, many employees who would normally be covered by the insurance scheme have moved out of the range of coverage through increased earnings.

The bill also contains a number of minor changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act with a view to improving its operations.

Recently a committee was set up to study extension of the insurance scheme to cover the logging industry, now one of the industries excepted from it as being of seasonal character. It was learned the committee has not yet made a report and no extension of the scheme to additional industries is proposed in the bill.

Farm Production In Canada Soars

Gross Value Greatest Since Big 1919 Year

OTTAWA, May 8 (CP).—The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported today that the gross value of agricultural production in Canada in 1942—estimated at $2,078,934,000—reached the highest point since the inflationary year of 1919. The bureau said an increase of more than $460,000,000 in the value of field crops in 1942 was chiefly responsible for the rise which occurred in the gross value between the years 1941 and 1942.

Estimated value of agricultural production in 1942 was 45 per cent above the 1941 estimate. Record yields of all grain crops, particularly in the Prairie Provinces, as well as moderate increases in prices, were responsible for the great expansion in the value of field crops.

The gross value of production of all other main farm products, except fibre flax and clover and grass seed, showed substantial gains in 1942, as compared with 1941. These gains, the bureau said, were particularly marked in milk and poultry production and farm animals.

FIGURES GIVEN ON GROSS VALUE

Gross value of 1942 agricultural production by commodities was as follows, with 1941 figures in brackets:

Field crops, $1,145,778,000 ($683,889,000); farm animals, $409,192,000 ($339,305,000); wool, $3,283,000 ($2,571,000); milk products, $272,421,000 ($206,543,000); fruits and vegetables, $74,340,000 ($69,494,000); poultry products, $131,273,000 ($89,009,000); fur farming, $6,697,000 ($5,539,000); maple products, $6,716,000 ($3,561,000); tobacco, $19,873,000 ($18,614,000); fibre flax, $2,155,000 ($3,118,000); clover and grass seed, $3,721,000 ($5,165,000); honey and wax, $3,505,000 ($3,318,000).

Report Bonus Planned for Civil Servants

OTTAWA, May 8 (CP).—The Ottawa Evening Journal said today that "the cost-of-living bonus will be extended shortly to all Government employees receiving up to $3,000."

"Official announcement is expected within a week," The Journal said.

". . . Up to the present the cost-of-living bonus has been allowed only to employees receiving up to $2,100 a year.

"Paying of the bonus will place civil servants on an equal footing with employees of private business and industry in payment of the bonus."

Two Killed, Five Hurt in Wreck

ROSEBURG, Ore., May 8 (AP).—A Southern Pacific passenger train jumped the rails north of here today and plunged down a steep embankment, killing one man and injuring five others.

The dead man was J. H. Corbett, Portland, engineer on the locomotive, which overturned after dragging two baggage cars, a mail car and two passenger coaches down the embankment.

The wreck occurred in early morning on a curve one mile south of Oakland. The train, The Rogue, was en route from Ashland to Portland. Railroad officials did not disclose cause of the derailment.

Two coaches and a lunch car and two sleeping cars remained upright and soldiers who were aboard took over the rescue work. They extricated a number of persons from the overturned cars, and although these were shaken, only five required hospitalization.

Will Probe Stock Sales

EDMONTON, May 8 (CP).—G. M. Blackstock, public utilities commissioner, said today a conference is being arranged to be held in Winnipeg to discuss the problem of "fly-by-night" stock salesmen and those who operate by long-distance telephones.

"At this conference," Mr. Blackstock said, "all the ramifications of stock selling will be examined and plans will be formulated to deal with them."

Representatives of security commissions from British Columbia to Quebec will attend the conference which will be held in a few weeks.

Commenting on a report in The Financial Post, of Toronto, that a Toronto brokerage firm was trying to sell stocks to Alberta residents by long distance telephone, Mr. Blackstock said:

"There is a Securities Act in all the provinces and the commissions which administer the act work closely together. . . . We control the operations of brokers and from time to time as new schemes are launched by promoters, we discuss the merits or demerits of each, accepting perhaps with modifications or rejecting the plan in whole."

Fourteen Dead in U.S. Plane Crash

OKLAHOMA CITY, May 8 (AP).—Fourteen men were killed and one critically injured tonight in the crash of a two-engined army transport plane near the Oklahoma city airport.

Captain Richard Martin, public relations officer, said seven of the dead were soldiers and the other three civilians. The injured soldier was taken to Tinker Field Hospital at the depot.

Names of the victims were withheld pending notification of next of kin.

MORE FRENCH WORKERS

BERNE, Switzerland, May 8 (AP).—A Paris dispatch to the Frankfurter Zeitung said today that Pierre Laval, French Chief of Government, had promised Nazi Labor Commissioner Fritz Sauckel that he would deliver the third contingent of 400,000 French workers to the German labor service by June 20. Meanwhile, Protestant churches in France were reported to be protesting strongly against Laval's labor policy, which they declared was "destroying thousands of homes."

VANCOUVER, May 8 (CP).—Mrs. Stephen Ely, who has seven sons in the Canadian (Active) Army, was chosen today to christen the first oil-burning Victory freighter to be launched at a West Coast Canadian shipyard.

CAMPAIGN IN BURMA

When the British launched an attack in Burma some months ago the first belief was that the objective was to reopen the Burma Road so as to insure a steady flow of supplies to the Chinese armies. Now it appears that the campaign is little more than a reconnaissance in force, a prolonged one it is true, but not in any case a full-scale offensive. Shortly after the British marched in General Sir Alan Hartley, Deputy Commander-in-Chief, India, said no risks were being taken, but that "we are quietly feeling our way." He went on to say: "I think I can claim that we have learned our lesson and appreciate the fact that we cannot underestimate the Japanese or take unnecessary or quixotic risks in prosecuting the war against them. We have learned by bitter experience their offensive tactics in the peculiar country of Malaya and Burma; we are now approaching the situation to see how best to deal with their suicide methods of defence."

That was last February. The British in their incursion drove forward to within thirty miles of Akyab. They never got any nearer, and for some time past they have been withdrawing at intervals. This is an episode in the war which will doubtless be dealt with by Mr. Winston Churchill when he makes his forthcoming review to Parliament. The Japanese have redoubled their efforts recently to restore the situation on the northwest frontier of Burma before the breaking of the monsoon. They have advanced a considerable distance towards their goal. In Burma there are serious difficulties in establishing lines of communication, difficulties described by a correspondent as "some of the most formidable in the world." It is jungle warfare there. The reconnaissance in force was undertaken to train the British and Indian soldiers in this type of fighting which has been brought to such a state of efficiency by the enemy. Now, for some time past, the British have been withdrawing under repeated pressure. The Times (London) says that "it has always been apparent that they (these jungle experiments with equipment and transport) could not represent even the prologue to the reconquest of Burma because the time available before the wet weather was too short in such a country."

"Whatever the result," says The Times, "it does not seem over-optimistic to say that the days of acute anxiety for the safety of India are over. Japanese strength on land has not been seriously diminished; but there is no sign that the enemy has ever been able to overcome the handicap of his long communications. His aircraft have been so consistently worsted in engagements with ours that those communications have been continually harried and frequently disrupted. Though this may make it difficult for him to stretch out his arm still farther, it will not prevent him from remaining a formidable foe in defence, as indeed some of the more recent combats have shown. The major operations which will be required for the recovery of Burma still lie ahead."

A GLANCE AT CHURCH HISTORY

It was announced recently that His Majesty the King has been pleased to appoint the Duke of Montrose as High Commissioner to represent him at the General Assembly of the National Church of Scotland. Interest attaches to this event for several reasons, among Christians of all denominations. Anyone who likes ceremonial will take pleasure in the spectacle of the formal opening of the National Assembly by Royal authority, and in the splendid social functions at which Scottish society will pay respectful homage to the representative of the Sovereign. Moreover, for historical reasons, this annual State pageant has its own significance.

When the question is asked why the King appears in the person of his High Commissioner at this church ceremonial it is usually taken as a sufficient answer to say that the assembly is that of the Established National Church in close alliance with the State, and that the High Commissioner's attendance is an act of State which is intended to give due recognition and emphasis to the fact. Further inquiry may be made as to the nature of this alliance between Church and State. Is it an alliance or partnership between equals, or is there a superiority of one over the other? These and similar questions involve a backward glance at Scottish history.

Everyone knows that in the period of the Reformation the influence of John Calvin was very powerful among the clergy and people of Scotland. Not only was his theology favorably received in that country and elsewhere, but his theory of church government and even his High Church views of the relation of Church and State gained many adherents. During the early days of the reforming movement a compromise system of church government was devised by Knox, which was intended to combine the best features of episcopacy with those of presbytery. After a trial of this plan, however, the Church decided to adopt in its entirety the system of government by courts of session, presbytery, synod, and assembly, a decision which was approved and ratified by the Scottish Parliament in 1592.

The Scottish reformers were strictly opposed to the "Erastian" doctrine of State supremacy in ecclesiastical affairs, which they described as the subjection of the Church of God to the regulations of an earthly government. They were largely in sympathy with the Calvinist view that the Church should command and the State obey. How did it come about that they were able to wage a powerful struggle against the King on this issue? The explanation is to be found in the fact that while the Scottish aristocracy bore sway in the Scottish Parliament, the Scottish nation at large, in its political as well as in its religious life, asserted itself in another place, namely, in the courts and councils of the Church. The elected representatives of the people sitting in these courts were able to profit greatly from the discipline afforded in the orderly methods of debate and discussion proper to deliberative and legislative bodies. It was under the auspices of the Church that the Scots learned the theory and practice of civil government. The Scottish people were thus united as a great democratic force. The historian, J. R. Green, says that the Scottish people rose into being under the guise of the Scottish Kirk.

The power of the Church thus supported by the common people was so great that its leaders boldly claimed for it an independence of the State, a claim that the King, James VI, was hardly strong enough to resent. In 1596, seven years before he succeeded to the English throne as James I, Melville, the greatest of the successors of Knox, told King James in open council that as King he was not the lord or head of the Church, but only a member. He was merely "God's silly vassal."

In the result, all that James could save of his "divine right" in the matter was the right of being present at the General Assembly and of fixing the time and place of the annual meeting. It seemed very little at the moment, but as things turned out it was enough. When he succeeded to the throne of England he was able to use his power to circumvent and defeat the Scottish clergy, reduce them to submission, and by the simple device of hindering and proroguing the meeting of the assembly for years on end, enforce the supremacy of the Crown.

These conflicts, however, belong to the past. The relations between Church and State in Scotland are today on a satisfactory basis. The High Commissioner's duties at the assembly are now, and have long been, of an amicable character. The right of the Sovereign to be present there has been preserved. King James insisted upon this right three and a half centuries ago. His successors maintained it and the present Sovereign exercises it today.

AIR POWER IN ACTION

The Tunisian campaign now drawing to its close is a further demonstration, if one were needed, that the side which holds the skies takes also the battle. That has been proved many times in this global conflict, both on land and at sea. In Tunisia, the skies are ours. One by one, enemy airdromes were rendered useless, his planes grounded, and his last patrols driven from the air. This is a precedent to victory. It is still true, and likely always will be, that air power cannot exist without sea power; and that both are useless unless there is on the ground force to meet force.

The Battle of Egypt, the Battle of Libya and the Battle of Tunisia cost the combined Axis forces somewhere in excess of 3,000 planes. They are ending now, with the Axis taken down completely out of the sky in the immediate battle area, with Allied bombers scarifying a zone four miles broad and one mile deep, through which infantry and tanks pour, with eyes for our side, but no eyes for the enemy; with a blockade of the water gap that has shut off all attempt at evacuation by the enemy of an untenable position. This is air power in action. It is that power of which the Luftwaffe once boasted, before the world. We hold it now.

It is not difficult to apply those lessons to the greater task that lies ahead. Tunisia is the curtain-raiser to a greater drama, the Battle of Europe. Into that the enemy will pour, and must pour, everything he has. Concentrations such as the 2,500-sortie flights of the Allies in Tunisia will be far surpassed. Aerial warfare on a scale not yet seen by mankind will mark the coming battles. The end, however, will be the same. Beset on multiple fronts, the enemy cannot hold the skies, and when he loses there he will have lost all.

TO TAXPAYERS' ACCOUNT

Investments by the British Columbia Treasury and associated Provincial bodies in Dominion of Canada War and Victory Loans have now exceeded $20,000,000, all told. That investment, made on behalf of the people of this province, is a fine one. In a substantial measure it has shown that British Columbia is in the war, not only with her men, but also with every available resource that she can muster. That is as it should be.

In the first war issue the Provincial Treasury took $800,000 in bonds, and subsequently increased that to more than $1,000,000. In subsequent issues, the provincial subscription increased from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000, and then to $5,000,000, which was the sum invested in the Third Victory Loan. This time, in the Fourth Victory Loan, the Province made a basic investment of $6,000,000, and now has brought that up, to $8,350,000, with the aid of sums invested on behalf of trust accounts.

There is considerable satisfaction in the thought that the Province's rest funds, pledged as they are to many different accounts, are helping in this manner, and on behalf of the provincial taxpayers. They have become fighting dollars, taking their part in the war. Were the sum maintained intact, annual interest earnings would amount to some $600,000, as a bonus on an investment that is the safest in Canada, the legal repository for trust funds.

What the Provincial Treasury can do, and has done, on behalf of provincial taxpayers, it is open to all citizens to do on their own account for themselves. Every bond taken in the Fourth Victory Loan is a link with the men who fight. It is a demonstration that here at home we are also in that fight, and determined to see it through to victory. It is putting first things first.

SPIRITED PERFORMANCE

The entertainment provided by the Victoria Girls' Highland Pipe Band on downtown streets yesterday afternoon proved to be one of the highlights of the Victory Bond campaign. The display reminded thousands who watched it that Victoria has a new attraction in its Highland lassies, and a singularly fine one. The pipe band is an acquisition to the community, already noted for its pipers, Highland dancing and Scottish games.

One of the largest audiences of the two-weeks'-old campaign rallied for the performance, which was given on View Street, between Broad and Douglas. Highland marches, Highland dancing, and even popular music set to the pibroch and chanters came from the versatile group, who staged their entertainment with great spirit. It was the lassies' day, and the Highland lassies walked away with most of the blue ribbons of the campaign to date.

Excitement is not enjoyment; in calmness lies true pleasure. The most precious wines are sipped, not bolted at a swallow.—Victor Hugo.

WE SHALL WIN

At the risk of being termed overconfident, a charge that has become a part of parrotry itself, I would like to set down now some of the reasons why I think the United Nations will win this war. I base these, such as they are, upon events which have been recorded day by day in my diary; not upon the opinions of anyone, but on action and action alone. With human forces, that is a fair test; for men wear their opinions much like their clothes, changing them with the fashion. Actions, however, are what men, and nations, put their real weight behind.

In the first place, I think the United Nations will win because they are responding to a war, and not making one. This is, of course, the belief that moral right is upon our side. As a veteran, I believe that man makes war, but that a power much greater than man takes a hand in the settlement. There is no entry in my diary to express that, but I put it here because I believe that it is not in history, or elsewhere among human relations, to hold that might will make right, ever will, or ever can. The settlement may be retarded, but come it does. To hold otherwise is to deny the existence of a Providence interested in his highest creation, man.

In the second place, I believe we shall win because we have the stronger idea in this war. The United Nations say this should be a free world, free to all nations, with nobody the master and none the slave. Against that, the aggressors have promulgated a set of doctrines which might be termed the old feudal system, and a new feudal system descending into international banditry, both contemplating a world in chains. No one yet has been able to chain man and keep him chained.

In the third place, I believe we shall win because in a material sense we have retained control of the waterways of the world. There are sound military reasons for asserting that it is these lines of communication which contribute to victory, and at its base. The loss of that advantage has penned our chief enemy to the Continent of Europe; and forced a separation between the Axis partners that nothing can bridge now. So this is a factor that counts double, for us.

In the fourth place, I believe we shall win because we are a very considerable part of the world's free population, not to be dictated to by any armed minority, however rabid or however threatening. As long as we remain united, you have only to count noses to see what I mean. For different reasons possibly, but all to the common end, the British Empire, the United States of America, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Chinese Republic, and some twenty-three other nations or countries are responding to this war, and with all their brains and energy. Nothing has been able to split us so far. In my opinion, nothing will.

In the fifth place, the enemy has had three and a half years to make the "surprises" of this war count decisively in his favor. Blitzkrieg was the first of them. It has failed. Tanks, dive-bombing, mass terror and all the rest of it, have been absorbed. More than that, we have learned to better his performance, excepting only the mass terror, and we don't need that. In spite of the times, there have been no genuine surprises in the means of making war. Such improvements as have come were logical, and we have kept fully abreast of those. Indeed, in a good many respects we lead.

Space is running out, so I must condense the rest. That part of the enemy's case which was bluff has been called. His factories, rails and roads are under fire, and ours are largely out of his range. Man-power for man-power, we have the edge. Quality for quality, our strategists, fighters and workers are a full match for his. Our resources are much greater, and our determination not less. Gaps have begun to show in the enemy's ranks, gaps which he is unable to fill. That is patent in first-line air strength, and elsewhere. Attuned to attack, the enemy now talks defence. Pledged to conquest, he would now become the savior of Europe the guardian of little peoples. Three peace proposals have been offered to us, but little disguised at their source.

Admittedly this is opinion, but it is based on events. The end of every war is to be read in its day-by-day happenings. In my opinion then, this is the year 1917 over again. The toughest battles are ahead. Baulked of a face-saving decision, Germany will fight to the bitter end. But that end is certain. It will be the unconditional surrender of our foes. Japan may delay the settlement, but Japan alone cannot fight the world. What matters now is that we all fight, and by every available means in our power. If it must be bonds, make it bonds and for a good round sum. The future will be ours, not Hitler's!

This week's fish story comes from Willows Park, according to a letter from "R. M." It appears our friend drove to the park on business, and when about to leave, noticed a flat fish two feet long lying on the ground in the centre of an animated group of horsemen. "Did you catch it?" our correspondent asked a man who appeared to own the object. "No, the horse did," was the reply. "Tell that to Ripley," our friend remarked. "It was like this," the horseman explained, "and don't worry, I am going to tell it to Ripley. I was exercising this horse, called Mortgage Lifter, in a foot or two of water at Willows Beach. The animal kicked something silvery in the salt chuck, and first thing I knew this flat fish was lying half-alive on the beach" . . . Letter from a dry cleaner, now a corporal in the army: "I judge from newspaper reports that dry-cleaning establishments are up in the air over recent classification as non-essential industries. Every job in a dry-cleaning establishment from processing furs to delivering can be performed by women, and so far there have been enough of them to fill in the gaps left by those who joined the armed forces" . . . According to a recent radio broadcast, a woman telephoned a doctor that her war worker husband felt too ill to leave his bed. "Take his temperature and I will get in touch with you shortly," the physician advised. Half an hour later he called the woman and asked: "Did you take his temperature? What did the thermometer read?" The woman replied: "I borrowed a barometer from a neighbor. It read 'very dry,' so I gave him a bottle of beer and he got up and went to work as usual" . . . According to a retired major, it is not correct to say an officer is on furlough. Officers obtain leave, and the ranks obtain furloughs.

"I must find another tailor. This one reads too much."

"Reads too much?"

"Yes. Every time he writes to me he begins, 'On going through my books!'"

U-Boat Menace Decreasing—Reduction from three to two per cent in the war risk insurance rate on hulls and cargoes of American steamers travelling through the war zone from American ports to Great Britain and the Atlantic coast of France was ordered today by Secretary McAdoo. With the decreasing effectiveness of the German submarine campaign the rate has been reduced gradually from 6½ per cent since last August. Vice-Admiral William H. Sims, commander of the National Naval Forces in the war zone, has said since the submarine campaign reached its highest point in April of last year, it has been going steadily down, while the tonnage of the Allies has gradually increased.

The Police Boat Arrives—A new naptha launch for the use of the Provincial police arrived over from Tacoma yesterday and will no doubt prove a convenience of importance to that body. The little craft is 25 feet long, supplied with a four horsepower engine, capable of driving her at a speed of eight knots an hour. The launch has a standing roof with good strong curtains about. Yesterday Chief Hussey took her out around the San Pedro on a trial trip, when everything about her worked like a charm.

Refusing to Assist at Fires—As several of our citizens may not be aware of the penalty which may be incurred from refusing to assist the fire department when called upon by the officers of the same, it may not be remiss to state that by law such persons are liable to be brought before the Mayor, who has the power to inflict such a fine. These remarks are made because we have been told that several persons refused to assist the already overworked firemen when called upon to do so at the late fire at Bunster's brewery.

LAND ARMY

Sir,—At last the Emergency Farm Labor Service has been launched on Vancouver Island and according to an announcement in yesterday's press recruiting has begun at 909 Government Street, Victoria, B.C.

It is earnestly hoped that all—every man, woman and child who can spare any time, even a few hours a day for a few weeks—will offer their services without delay to the local branch. Their services are sorely needed in spite of an apparent tardiness on the part of farmers in filling up the questionnaire forms. Most farmers are fed up with filling up forms so are inclined to put them on one side, which, in this case, is a most unwise procedure.

Unfortunately this land army scheme has been started far too late this year and as a result many farmers despairing of getting seeding or harvest help have been forced to curtail their seeding operations or change to alternative crops, such as pasture, requiring less labor. This is another reason for tardiness in filling up the forms. A further one is that a number of farmers are waiting to find out what kind of help is available before completing their crop plans and applying for the necessary help.

General Pearkes' appeal for volunteer workers in the land army should encourage enlistment. It is also to be hoped that the general will use his authority to make service personnel available for the coming harvest season and that last year's refusal by his headquarters to a request to do this will be reversed. Much valuable crop was lost last year through lack of help.

General Pearkes may also be able to use his authority in obtaining the release from the armed forces of farmers' sons to work on the land, who were arbitrarily called up from the farms or were "induced" to volunteer before sanity began to prevail in the vital problem of our food supply.

AN APPEAL

Sir,—I am writing this missive in the hope that the person who found the purse on No. 9 street car at 3 p.m. Friday containing the sum of $45 will refund same after reading this letter.

The circumstances are as follows: The greater amount of the money was earned by a young man at Yarrows, who for the past six months has been bedridden, his mother just having collected the cheque at Yarrows and cashed it in town. These good people being particular friends of mine, and knowing the circumstances, I felt duty bound to write this letter in the hope that the person concerned will feel it their duty to return same. The mother is resigned to the loss of other moneys than her son's cheque, which amounted to $36.

If this letter has the desired effect, kindly mail money to John McAlpine, 1505 Fort Street.

I might add that returning the purse and ration cards was much appreciated, and instinctively feel that the party concerned is not a thief, but that the temptation was too great to resist.

Thanking you for your valuable space, I remain, yours truly,

CHARLES F. RAMSAY.

KITSILANO BOYS' BAND

Sir,—I would like to know why one of the outstanding musical treats of the season was so little advertised that hundreds, probably thousands, of Victorians knew nothing about it. I refer to the lovely and excellent performance of the Kitsilano Boys' Band at the Shrine Auditorium on the evening of May 4. I have heard some of the best bands in Europe and the United States but have never been more thrilled than I was by its performance last Tuesday evening. The youth and enthusiasm of the boys are in themselves an inspiration, but, when coupled with rare artistry and technique such as they and their leader display, the performance is lifted into the sphere of the excellent and the best. The selections chosen made a perfect programme. Gem after gem, played with delightful artistry and spirit, inspired the audience as, I am sure, few band performances ever have done. The master of ceremonies, one of the "old boys" who toured England in 1934, where they were feted and appreciated as they deserved, was all that could be desired. Miss B. McVie's rendering of "Don't Be Angry With Me Sergeant" added just the note of humor and fun to the programme to make it perfect.

People soon forget, and, besides, there are thousands of new people in Victoria to whom the Kitsilano Boys' Band is only a name, but those of us who remember the days when people stood lined up for blocks to get in to hear it would never miss a chance to hear it; and "take it from me," this present band is just as good as it was then, and that is saying a great deal. I do hope the wonderful leader of the band will bring his boys back, to play next time in the Royal Victoria Theatre, and that it will be advertised so that the place will be packed. Music does not recognize international barriers, and surely no one would be so narrow as to be prejudiced because this famous band comes from Vancouver. Wherever they are from, the members of the band and their leader deserve the highest praise and appreciation.

We would be most fortunate if we could get them to play for us in the park sometime this coming Summer.

FOR WINDBREAKERS

Sir,—At this time when new straw and felt hats are being bought by so many of us may I call to mind the need for old felt hats for the manufacture of windbreakers for the Merchant Marine.

We have supplied some 400 of these garments since the organization of our windbreaker department and have been asked to step up our production.

I am, therefore, appealing to the generosity of our many well wishers to help us in this work by leaving their old felt hats at British Bundles, 531 Bastion Street, or at the salvage office, 1218 Government Street.

All the felt hats are washed before using so that their condition when turned in is not too important.

The supply of windbreakers is of inestimable value to the men fighting their way through the cold and dangers of the supply routes and if our friends will help us we shall not fall down on the job.

The need for clothing in Britain is still great with many bombings of which we in Canada never even hear and we are still shipping many tons of our usual good new and reconditioned garments. The continued co-operation of the public is asked to aid us in keeping up the constant flow of assistance of this nature to the people of Britain. Parcels may be left at either of the two above addresses.

TIME-WORN IRON RATION

You would think that in this age of scientific achievement something better would have been evolved in the way of emergency food for soldiers in the field than the now time-honored biscuits. You would think that after a decade of ballyhoo about calories, vitamins and proteins the food scientist would have come out of his laboratory with a product guaranteed to be eaten with some relish instead of with considerable distaste.

Bully beef was the great standby of our armies in the last war, and they tell me it was a well-known dish even in the Boer War. Yet the great discoveries of the modern era have by-passed this important field and our troops of today have nothing better to look forward to when the going gets tough. Emergency ration kits for air crews also contain plentiful supplies of this unimaginative foodstuff.

FAR FROM ATTRACTIVE

Although unavoidable, it is ironic, too, that iron rations have to be eaten at times when something more appetizing would do more good. In barracks or behind the lines, when the need is not so great, troops have a variety of food to keep their insides happy, but in action rations are necessarily scarce and difficulties of supply often enforce prolonged periods of bully beef and biscuits.

Corned beef, the polite name for bully, is quite tasty as you buy it over the counter, but eaten out of the tins that reach men in the front line it is far from attractive. It is nutritious enough, no doubt, but when eaten day after day after day no more nauseating meal can be imagined.

TOO MUCH FOR HIM

I remember in the early part of the last war during one such period, watching a young soldier open his first overseas parcel. He literally beamed in anticipation of the delicacies he expected to find as he hurriedly tore the package open. Then his face dropped a mile, for thrusting its bulk upward from the rest of the contents were two tins of bully beef.

It was too much for him. He grabbed the tins and with a muttered imprecation hurled them far over the parapet towards the enemy trenches. If the sender ever heard of it, I am sure he was forgiven, for he had eaten all the bully he could stand.

FINAL JUDGMENT

It was bully beef and hard biscuits—and how fusty seem the latter—that was the mainstay of the Eighth Army during the concluding weeks of the desert campaign. An American correspondent, returned from Libya, tells how he reached the stage where bully filled him with such loathing that a meal with an American Air Force unit seemed like a Thanksgiving dinner. Even starving German prisoners turned their heads away when offered a tin of bully beef, for they had been eating it ever since the Germany army captured British food stores at Tobruk.

The final judgment on this inescapable iron ration, however, was surely that of the desert mouse which shared a jeep with the correspondent. He would eat the labels off cans and accept bread and cheese with alacrity, but bully he ignored.

Undying gratitude, and perhaps some fame and fortune, awaits the dietitian who comes to the rescue of the front line soldier and provides him with emergency nourishment that custom cannot stale.

The time used is Pacific Standard for the 120th Meridian west. It is counted from 0 to 24 hours, from midnight to midnight. The figures for height serve to distinguish high water from low water. Where blanks occur in the table, the tide rises or falls continuously during two successive tidal periods without turning.

To find the depth of water on the sill at the Esquimalt Graving dock at any tide, add 30 feet to the height of high water as above given.

Envisions Prosperous Contented Farm Folk

Would Maintain Parity on Prices on Sales And Purchases in Period Following War

OTTAWA, May 8 (CP)—The requirements of a prosperous, contented farm population, enlarged in number and enjoying amenities now the privilege of urban residents, were described today by D. G. McKenzie, chairman of the Board of Grain Commissioners and head of the subcommittee on agricultural reconstruction. He spoke to the House of Commons Reconstruction and Re-establishment Committee. Provincial Premiers will be among others who will appear before the committee.

Mr. McKenzie said the "self-respecting and competent farmer should not have to go before a debt adjustment board; nor should he expect, from a long-distance point of view, that he would have to accept bonuses or handouts from Governments for any purpose whatsoever."

There should be an endeavor in the postwar period to maintain a parity of price between what the farmer gets for what he sells and what he pays for what he buys.

As in the past, Mr. McKenzie's brief questioned whether the Western farmer would not be in a better position today if his operating powers had been more restricted.

HIS HOME WOULD BE HIS OWN

"In that case his home, however humble, would be his own rather than belonging to his creditors."—

Urging a survey of the debt situation among farmers, Mr. McKenzie said action to reduce the total farm debt burden to bring it in line with an amount consistent with the productivity of the land represented a difficult but important problem.

Provisions for a mortgage loan bank are being examined by the sub-committee, since it appears existing legislation in this regard requires expansion, he said.

In the provision of working capital or short-term loans, the development of co-operative credit unions in several provinces gave "indication of a sound approach to this problem." As a matter of policy, consideration should be given this form of providing moneys needed as working capital by farmers.

In the development of markets, there should be study of means of extending the present livestock quota shipments to the United States; negotiation of an agreement with the United Kingdom for continuation of a substantial proportion of Britain's bacon requirements; and negotiation of an agreement with Russia or other continental countries for the sale, for a period of ten years after the peace, of the livestock necessary for the re-establishment of herds.

NEW OUTLETS FOR FARM PRODUCTS

Scientific research indicated new outlets for farm products. Some 400,000,000 bushels of cereal grains might be used in the United States in 1944 in the production of industrial alcohol. Synthetic rubber, in which such alcohol was used, now was one of Canada's greatest needs.

In planning for postwar agricultural reconstruction, the first step should be a complete classification of all agricultural land in every province, based on soil surveys, Mr. McKenzie said. Then "intelligent plans and production programmes may proceed." Coincident with these studies, plans should be developed for the use of all precipitation and water supplies.

Assistance to farmers' sons desiring to take up land should be considered.

In view of the limitations of agriculture, it might be that Canada should seek to decentralize industry and establish manufacturing and productive activities in various areas which were suited to these activities.

Better homes for the farmer and his help were required to make farm life more attractive. As part of a national housing scheme applying to the farm as well as the city, a national home beautification campaign should be examined.

Rural communities might organize on a co-operative basis to subscribe part of the cost of community halls and other undertakings, the plan to be financed by the Dominion Government by way of loan to be repaid in fifteen or twenty years.

The local organization would be responsible for organizing various community activities, both educational and recreational.

"Blood, Tears and Sweat"

May 13, 1940

"I have nothing to offer but blood, toil, tears and sweat."

"You ask, what is our aim? I can answer in one word: Victory, victory at all costs, victory in spite of all terror, victory, however long and hard the road may be, for without victory there is no survival."

"Their Finest Hour"

June 18, 1940

"The whole fury and might of the enemy must very soon be turned on us. Hitler knows that he will have to break us in this island or lose the war . . . Let us therefore brace ourselves to our duties, and so bear ourselves that, if the British Empire and its Commonwealth last for a thousand years, men will still say, 'This was their finest hour.'"

"So Many to So Few"

August 20, 1940

The gratitude of every home in our Island, in our Empire, and indeed throughout the world . . . goes out to the British airmen who, undaunted by odds, unwearied in their constant challenge and mortal danger, are turning the tide of the world war by their prowess and by their devotion. Never in the field of human conflict was so much owed by so many to so few."

"Burn and Bleed"

February 12, 1942

"The dominating aim which we set before ourselves in the conference at Casablanca was to engage the enemy's forces on land, sea and air on the largest possible scale and at the earliest possible moment . . . We have to make the enemy burn and bleed in every way that is physically and reasonably possible."

Public Will See Ships in Making At Victoria Yard

Illustrate Reason For Victory Loan

A tour will be conducted again today at Victoria Machinery Depot when the gates will be open to the public from 12 noon to 12:20 p.m.

Directed by shipyard police, Victorians will have the opportunity to view ships in various stages of construction.

J. Rannie, shipyard manager, has made arrangements for the tour, which will take an open-air route past a ship with keel newly laid, another with shell half completed and two others in different phases of outfitting.

A broadcast commentary will be given by plant officials over the shipyard loudspeaker system.

The tour, organized on behalf of the Victory Loan, serves the purpose of showing the public, in part, the disposition of money invested in Victory bonds.

C. Clements, personnel manager, pointed out the key to support of the Allies overseas is shipping. "It is our Achilles' heel which the Nazi U-boats are unsuccessfully trying to cripple," he said. "It is no secret that freighters of the finest type are being built at local shipyards. Ships are now needed for all kinds of cargo. Besides war materials, for example, over 1,000,000 tons of foodstuffs have gone from North America to Russia along on Victory ships."

The employees of Victoria Machinery Depot, besides building ships, have subscribed over $200,000 in Fourth Victory Loan bonds, an average of approximately $100 per subscriber.

F.O. Roy Haines Is Home After Escape From the Germans

Missing for three months when his Halifax bomber failed to return from a raid over the Ruhr, F.O. Alfred Roy Haines, D.F.C., who eventually escaped the Nazis, returned to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Haines, Cedar Hill Road, Friday.

Looking fit and happy to be home, the well-known island athlete, who carved a niche for himself in athletic circles prior to joining the R.C.A.F., would have nothing to say on his escape from the Germans. The story of his good fortune must remain a secret until after hostilities, for if any part of it was learned by the Nazis it might endanger other Allied airmen forced down in Europe.

F.O. ALFRED ROY HAINES

F.O. Haines was decorated for his display of "courage, fortitude and resource of a high order," during his escape.

Well known in provincial sporting circles as a baseball, soccer and basketball player, F.O. Haines was a school teacher before joining the colors in 1941.

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

The snapshot of the boy and his model airplane makes an excellent single picture, and offers, too, excellent material for a step-by-step picture sequence.

ANY picture that tells a story—no matter how simple or everyday the story theme—is usually interesting. Today, however, a new story form is receiving wider and wider acceptance—that is, the picture sequence.

When a story is told in one picture, details must often be omitted. It is necessary to extract the essence of the story, and to summarize it in a single moment. But in the picture series or sequence, a story is told step by step. As many steps or details can be presented as the story demands and, in addition, the lapse of time can be shown.

Consider the picture shown here of the small boy completing an airplane model. As a single "story-telling" picture it's excellent. But couldn't this story be told even more impressively by a step-by-step picture sequence?

The first picture, in such a sequence, might show the youngster poring over blueprints. The second, laying out material on a work table. The third, forming the skeleton on the model. And so on until finally, with a proud smile, he launches the plane for its first flight.

This is just an outline. Probably you can think of other steps, but that's part of the fun of planning and executing such a picture story. It's like writing a movie scenario—and there are dozens of simple everyday stories around any home that can be told easily and best in sequence form.

See if you can't think of at least one or two today. They're splendid training for more advanced picture-making, and they'll certainly make a big hit with any service man.—John van Guilder.

Liquor, Flat Tire And Cauliflower

As city police explain it, many citizens having purchased and probably consumed by now their May allotment of liquor, the usual Saturday rush of business in the booking office last night was practically nil. Barring the fertile-minded rumpot who is no respecter of Saturday or any other day on which he can get his twenty-four supply, there were few arrests yesterday or last night in which drinking was a factor.

Still, the police were not wholly idle. There was, for example, the little woman who had her husband, a soldier, brought in because, she said, he had beaten her. Finding her unmarked, the police report reads, "she was advised to proceed by summons." Of the husband, it is recorded that "he had a cut on his head which he claimed had been done by his wife," and, the report concludes, "he was taken to the Military Hospital by the Provost Corps."

Next, the lady who phoned that her car was stalled on Pandora Avenue between Government and Broad. Would the police please help her out? They did. She had a flat tire. They fixed it.

Churches continue to suffer at the hands of window-breaking boys. This time a batted or thrown ball went sailing through a pane, but so a number of smaller boys told Constables Webb and Holmes, a larger boy, about fifteen, retrieved the ball "by going into the church with a pass key!"

Finally, the episode of Park Superintendent W. H. Warren's cauliflower plants, fifty of them, in a lot at Yates and Cook Streets, where Mr. Warren had been growing them for seed. All fifty plants were uprooted and left lying on the ground.

Play Too Real

VANCOUVER, Wash., May 8 (AP)—Vancouver High School's senior play cast took the script too literally.

One scene called for Lloyd Boddy to be bound, gagged, placed in a coffin and left there—all of which was done expertly in rehearsal.

Long after rehearsal was over, the stage crew heard muffled cries from the coffin. Inside they found Boddy.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. A. J. Robert, Richmond Avenue, gave a delightful party for her daughter, Michele, on her seventh birthday. A color scheme of pink and white was tastefully carried out in the decorations; the tea table being centred with Spring flowers in a shallow green bowl and lighted by pink tapers in silver holders. Balloons and favors marked the places and before the little guest of honor was placed a white cake topped with a lighted pink candle. An afternoon of jolly games was enjoyed by the children, all schoolmates, including Rosemary and Nigel Kent-Barber, Mary Beckton, Richard Roy, Paul Whitehouse, Julia Scruten, Mary-Jane Agar, Ann Copeland, Andree Lindsay, Betty Fowler, Joan Ross, Susan Edgell, Joan Cornish, Mary Biddle and Stephanie Quainton.

First Week of May Is Favored for Weddings

WHEELOCK—RIDEWOOD

A profusion of white flowers, with Calla lilies and lily of the valley predominating, arranged in St. Matthias' Church, made a lovely setting for the wedding of Betty Ann, eldest daughter of Dr. and Mrs. H. E. Ridewood, St. Charles Street, and Lieut. Sidney Prince Wheelock, R.C.N.V.R., son of Mrs. F. E. Wheelock, Wolfville, Nova Scotia, and the late Dr. Wheelock, which took place at 3 o'clock on Saturday afternoon. The ceremony was solemnized by Rev. E. G. Burges-Browne, assisted by Rev. A. M. McKetrick, naval chaplain, with the organist in attendance. The lovely bride was given away by her father, and wore a flowing gown of white printed organza with a long train and sleeves and a square neckline. Her veil was of white illusion net, and her round bouquet was of gardenias and lily of the valley. Girlish frocks of white organza with tucked bodices and long full skirts and red shoes were worn by the bridesmaid, who carried bouquets of red and white carnations and swainsona. Miss Pamela Jones, the maid of honor, and her sister, Miss Meg Jones and Miss Sheila Stewart, wore large candy-stripe picture hats of red and white organdy, and the bride's sisters, the Misses Jane and Elizabeth Ridewood wore red and white flowers in their hair. Surgeon Lieut. Gordon Wheelock, R.C.N.V.R., supported his brother, and acting as ushers were Pay-Lieut.-Commander C. J. Dillon, Lieut. John H. Lincoln, Lieut. David Fladgate and Pay-Lieut. Kenneth Roy, all R.C.N.V.R. A naval guard of honor with crossed swords was formed as the couple left the church. All white flowers were arranged at the home of the bride's parents for the reception where a host of friends was welcomed by Dr. and Mrs. Ridewood. Refreshments were served in a large marquee on the flower-bordered lawn, and after the toast to the bride had been given by Dr. F. Kincaid, the bride cut the cake with her husband's sword. For a honeymoon on the Island the bride chose a turquoise blue light wool dress with a small sailor hat with a brim of violets, a fawn topcoat with a fox collar and a boutonniere of lily of the valley and violas. Lieut. and Mrs. Wheelock will return to Victoria to reside.

The groom was formerly secretary to both Hon. J. L. Ilsley, Minister of Finance in the Dominion Government, and Hon. Angus MacDonald, Minister of National Defence for Naval Service.

DORAN—GALLOP

Hilda Mary, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Gallop, 2114 Belmont Avenue, became the bride of Sapper George Doran, R.C.E., son of the late Mr. and Mrs. S. Doran, Nanaimo, at a ceremony conducted by Rev. F. Comley at St. Alban's Church on Friday evening. Members of St. Alban's Senior Women's Auxiliary had beautifully decorated the church for the occasion with lilacs, tulips and narcissi. Mrs. F. Wilson was at the organ console, and Mrs. W. Garnham was soloist. Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore white sheer posed over white satin. The gown was slightly en traîn, with long-waisted, tight-fitting bodice, and long pointed sleeves. Her embroidered veil was caught with a coronet of orange blossoms, and her bouquet was composed of pink roses, lily of the valley and heather. Her only ornament was a string of pearls. Attending the bride was her cousin, Miss Esther Allman, who wore dusty yellow sheer in long-waisted effect and full skirt. Her shoulder veil was caught with tiny flowers, and she carried pink snapdragons and blue iris. Sapper Stanley Doran, R.C.E., brother of the groom, was groomsman, and ushers were A.B. Douglas Gallop, R.C.N.V.R., and Mr. S. Robinson, Nanaimo. Guests were received at the reception following in St. Alban's Church Hall by Mr. and Mrs. Gallop and the groom's sister, Mrs. S. Robinson, and the young couple stood beneath a floral arch. A three-tier wedding cake centred the table, flanked by pink tapers in silver sconces. Sapper and Mrs. Doran are spending a honeymoon Up-Island, and will reside at 2114 Belmont Avenue.

FROST—FALLAS

Rev. James Hood officiated at the wedding of Alice, eldest daughter of Major and Mrs. C. Fallas, 3041 Donald Street, and A.B. Herbert Douglas Frost, R.C.N.V.R., youngest son of the late Mr. and Mrs. W. Frost, Edmonton, Alta., which took place in the Manse of Esquimalt United Church on Saturday evening. The bride was given in marriage by her grandfather, Mr. W. Dempster, owing to the absence of her father on active service, and wore a powder blue dress with brown accessories and a corsage buquet of gardenias. She was attended by her sister, Miss Audrey Fallas, in a gold and brown ensemble with a corsage bouquet of pink and gold rosebuds, and Leading Seaman Calvin Holmes, R.C.N.V.R., was groomsman. The reception was held at the home of the bride's parents in a pretty floral setting, and after the toast had been given by Mr. A. Rogers, the bride cut the cake which centred the buffet supper table decorated with vases of pink snapdragons, blue iris and narcissi, and ivory tapers. For a honeymoon in Vancouver the bride donned a beige topcoat with a wolf collar over her wedding outfit. A.B. and Mrs. Frost will make their home in Victoria. The bride's grandmother, Mrs. W. Dempster, and the groom's sister, Mrs. Gordon Gelvart, Vancouver, assisted Mrs. Fallas in welcoming the guests to the reception.

BISHOP—MURDOCH

At a largely attended wedding in Oak Bay United Church on Saturday evening, Adele Kathleen, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Murdoch, 3041 Chaucer Street, became the bride of Bdr. Roy Bishop, R.C.A., elder son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. E. Bishop, 1055 Pentrelew Place. Rev. J. Hood, of Esquimalt United Church, conducted the ceremony against a background of Calla lilies, mauve and pink stocks. Mr. L. Partington was at the organ, and Captain J. F. Petrie sang "O Promise Me" during the signing of the register. Given in marriage by her father, the bride was charming in a gown of white satin embossed with velvet daffodils, fashioned with a train and leg o' mutton sleeves. Her finger-tip veil was attached to a Mary Stuart headdress with clusters of orange blossom, and her bouquet of pink rosebuds and gardenias was showered with lily of the valley. Preceding the bride up the aisle were her attendants in full-skirted frocks of sheer with bishop sleeves. Miss Enid Bates, the maid of honor, was in pale yellow with a matching chapel veil and carried a bouquet of mauve stocks and yellow marguerites, and the bridesmaids were her sisters, the Misses Audrey and Joyce Murdoch, in mauve, with mauve and purple flower hats, who carried pink carnations and mauve sweet peas. Her younger sister, Betty Jean, the flower girl, was in pale green net over taffeta with a matching bow in her hair. She carried a Victorian posy of yellow roses and mauve sweet peas. Their brother, Lance-Sgt. Victor Murdoch, R.C.A., was groomsman, and Messrs. James Smith, Phil Braithwaite and Glenn Murdoch were ushers. The reception was held at 1416 Douglas Street, during which the couple stood beneath a floral arch to welcome the guests. Rev. J. Hood gave the toast, and afterwards the bride cut the cake which centred a table arranged with pink rosebuds and lily of the valley. Bdr. and Mrs. Bishop will live on Oak Bay Avenue, after a honeymoon on the Mainland. The bride left in a pale blue coat with a fox collar over a beige dress with brown accessories.

JOHNSTONE-HAMILTON

Spring flowers were charmingly arranged in St. Mary's Church for the wedding of Margaret Constance, second daughter of Mrs. A. V. Hamilton, 1397 St. David Street, and the late Major Hamilton, and Squadron Leader Norman Richard Johnstone, R.C.A.F., younger son of Mr. T. A. Johnstone, Winnipeg, and the late Mrs. Johnstone, which was solemnized by Ven. Archdeacon Nunns at 1:45 on Saturday afternoon. Mr. F. T. C. Wickett played the wedding music. The bride was given in marriage by Mr. Richard Cullen, an old family friend, and wore an afternoon frock of navy blue crepe with white accents, a navy hat and white accessories complemented by a corsage bouquet of white orchids and lily of the valley. Miss Phoebe Hamilton was her sister's bridesmaid in a pale green dress, a white hat and accessories and a corsage bouquet of gardenias and lily of the valley. Mr. Charles Proudfoot, Winnipeg, was groomsman. A small, informal reception was held at the home of the bride's mother, where the toast to the bride was given by Mr. G. Eastman. Vases of lily of the valley and lighted white tapers in silver candelabra flanked the cake which centred the refreshment table. Squadron Leader and Mrs. Johnstone left later for the Mainland en route to Sydney, N.S.

W.A. to R.C.E. Is Holding First Tag Day, May 15

The Royal Canadian Engineers' Women's Auxiliary is sponoring its first tag day on May 15. Formerly one of the small auxiliaries comprising "Apascoe," the W.A. to the R.C.E. now has its own charter and its foremost aim is to supply 300 cigarettes regularly each month to every engineer who went overseas from Victoria. It is mainly for this purpose the tag day is being held. Headquarters on that day will be at the Victoria Hat Manufacturing Co., Ltd., and anyone willing to tag or help in any way may report there at 8:45 o'clock on May 15. Mrs. R. E. Wilking and Mrs. R. C. V. Bessonette are in charge of arrangements.

Many letters are received by the auxiliary from the boys overseas which are touching in their gratitude; in most cases the only cigarettes they receive are those from the W.A., as many of the sappers work far away from regimental headquarters, where "smokes" from home are distributed. The auxiliary makes a point of sending parcels of cigarettes to individual men and since a year ago last October not one batch, to the members' knowledge, has failed to reach its destination. Mrs. S. I. Ricketts is in charge of these shipments.

Knitted articles of all kinds are made and sent to every sapper on the list serving overseas. Shipments include sweaters, socks, helmets, scarves, gloves, and special presents are sent at Christmas and Easter. The members feel, however, the most important gift and the one most appreciated is the 300 cigarettes per man sent every month, and as long as the auxiliary is able to carry on the members are determined that the boys, so far from home, shall be sure of their ten cigarettes a day.

Schools of Nursing Announce Necessary Education Standard

All schools of nursing in British Columbia require applicants to have at least junior matriculation standing in general education. Most schools will give preference to applicants with higher standing, that is, in addition to junior matriculation, one or two years of university, or a business course, provided they have the other necessary qualifications.

There are seven training schools in British Columbia. For complete information as to their requirements candidates should communicate with the superintendent of nurses. A list of the seven schools follows:

The Royal Columbian Hospital, New Westminster; The Royal Inland Hospital, Kamloops; The Royal Jubilee Hospital, Victoria; St. Eugene Hospital, Cranbrook; St. Joseph's Hospital, Victoria; Vancouver General Hospital, Vancouver, and St. Paul's Hospital, Vancouver.

City Council of Birmingham has enlisted the aid of children in planning the Birmingham of the future. In a booklet just brought out, showing suggestions for replanning, children are asked to submit ideas.

Knits 100 Socks

MISS BEATRICE OSGOOD

Who last year knit 100 pairs of socks for the Red Cross, and to date this year has knit three dozen pairs. Miss Osgood lives at 2227 Brighton Avenue, and buys the wool herself, saving the money from her allowance, and knits only in her spare time. When a dozen pairs are complete she takes them to the Red Cross, and she prefers to buy the wool "because she feels she is helping and doing her part," as her mother, Mrs. H. Osgood explained.

Bridal Attendants Must Conform to Board Regulations

June—traditional month of weddings—is near.

At long last, the almost overlooked father of the bride gets a break!

No longer need he anxiously contemplate the mounting cost of getting daughter married. The Wartime Prices and Trade Board decided to curtail elaborate wedding attire for the duration.

The board, not wishing to unduly blunt cupid's arrow, points out that the bride may still step afterwards in full-length gown of cream or white.

But — costumes of the bride's mother, bridesmaids or flower girls must conform to board regulations for them, no "long skirts." This is to conserve materials.

Custom or home dressmakers are advised that administrator's order No. A-474, governing manufacture of women's, misses' and children's wear, eliminates all fussy detail, overall tucking, shirring or pleating. "Minor trimming" is defined by the order.

War Correspondent Weds Army Nurse

SOMEWHERE IN ENGLAND, May 8 (CP)—Ross Munro, war correspondent for The Canadian Press, and Lieut. Helen Stevens, of Dunnville, Ont., now serving with the Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps at No. 1 Canadian General Hospital, were married today.

The groom is the son of Mrs. J. Ross Munro, of Toronto, and the late Mr. Munro. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Stevens, of Dunnville.

Col. M. C. O'Neill, of Edmonton, assistant principal Roman Catholic chaplain at Canadian Military Headquarters, officiated at the ceremony which was held in St. John's Church. The bride was given away by Col. G. E. Wright, of Montreal, her commanding officer, and the matron of honor was Lieut. Thelma Dickson, of Toronto.

The groomsman was Lt.-Col. C. S. Wallace, of Toronto, chief of the Canadian Army Public Relations Unit in the field. The ushers were D. E. Burritt, superintendent of The Canadian Press London Bureau, and William Stewart, parliamentary correspondent of The Canadian Press.

The reception was held in the nursing sisters' mess of the hospital where Lieut. Stevens is a physiotherapist.

Honor Recent Bride

The home of Mrs. George Holt, Ten Mile Point, was the scene of a pretty post-nuptial surprise shower yesterday afternoon, arranged by Mrs. James McGuire in honor of Mrs. B. Quaintance, formerly Dorothy Holt, a teacher at Otter Point School. The bride received many lovely gifts which were enclosed in a "little red schoolhouse" mounted on a platform representing the schoolyard complete with flagpole and bell. It was drawn in by three little girls, Misses Elma and Joan Snider with little Joan Groff ringing the bell. Corsage bouquets were presented by Elma Snider to the bride and her mother and Mrs. E. C. Thompson, mother of the groom. Refreshments were served by the hostess assisted by Mrs. P. Groff and Miss Elaine Fuller to more than fifty guests who had gathered to offer their best wishes to the bride.

Lance-Corporal C. V. Daphne Smith has a key position at Vancouver Barracks—she is a military switchboard operator. This department takes pride in the fact that it was the first to be taken over by the CWAC to release men for the fighting units. The operators are carefully investigated and tested prior to serving in this confidential position. L./Cpl. Smith says: "It is much more interesting than a civilian exchange, although the work is exacting as we handle a terrific number of calls. Our staff of eighteen girls, who work in shifts all day and night, have to be thoroughly trained in the use of military terms. Our pet peeve is that there are too many non-essential calls from civilians that may delay important military calls."

L./Cpl. Smith is one of the "originals" in the CWAC, having joined in October, 1941, before it became part of the Canadian Army. Her application was made out by Lt.-Col. Joan Kennedy, who is now Director of the whole CWAC.

CWAC girls are proud of their uniform and the interesting and important work they are doing in Canada's war effort. More girls and women are needed. Full information may be obtained from the CWAC Recruiting Office, 717 Granville Street (old Hotel Vancouver) or any national Selective Service Office.

Bridge-Tea to Aid Social Service Work of Auxiliary

The event, to take place in the Nurses' Home, starting at 2:30 o'clock, will take the place of the decorated table display which has formerly attracted thousands of Victorians and visitors from all parts of the province and United States every year. The display is canceled for the duration owing to the difficulties of transportation and other restrictions.

All proceeds of the event will be given to social service work, an important project of the auxiliary. This field of work has extended enormously since the war and it is hoped to be able to cope with the increasing problems with the added financial assistance the bridge will give.

Tea will be served and a contest has been arranged. Players are asked to bring their own table covers, cards and tallies. Mah Jong may also be played, players providing their own equipment. Games may also be arranged at home. Mrs. H. G. Ellis is in charge of tea, and the assisting committee includes Mrs. R. B. Wilson, Mrs. J. Hewitt, Mrs. Gordon Mason, Mrs. J. A. Macdonnell and Mrs. B. Red Cross Notes

QUEEN MARY THANKS CANADIAN RED CROSS

Her Majesty Queen Mary has commanded that a message of thanks be sent to the Canadian Red Cross Society for its gifts to invalid children in Britain. Full text of the message written by her secretary is: "I am commanded by Queen Mary to write and ask you to convey to the Canadian Red Cross Society Her Majesty's warm thanks for their really magnificent gifts to the Victoria Home for Invalid Children (formerly at Margate and now removed to Clewer, near Windsor), of which she has long been patron. The Queen's most grateful thanks are due to many generous workers and donors and to those who allot these splendid presents. To receive dozens of sheets and pillow cases, twenty afghans, 200 pounds of jam, two or three dozen children's outfits and beautiful dolls and toys is really overwhelming in these days! Nobody needs this generous help more than these suffering children and Her Majesty is proportionately grateful for such kind thought and such generous expression of it."

RED CROSS SHIRT BUTTON DRIVE

"Cut the buttons off that old shirt you are using for a duster and if you have no children of your own, give them to the neighbors' children to take to the Junior Red Cross," are the instructions of a Powell River Junior Red Cross Branch which is having a shirt button drive. Shirt buttons are badly needed by the local Red Cross and cannot be bought locally.

Schools Not Exempt From Aerial Attack

WASHINGTON, May 8 (AP) — American schools are not exempt from air attack, Civilian Defence Director James M. Landis warned today, urging a check-up on the protection measures for the nation's 30,000,000 school children.

The particular situation for each school must be considered, he said, to determine the best method of protection. The time to evacuate a school will always be short—seldom more than three minutes, usually less than fifteen, he declared.

"It is no solution," a summary issued by his office points out, "to evacuate children from a poor building to a good shelter too far away to reach within the known time limit. This would then expose them to bombing out of doors, and to the ions of shell fragments from anti-aircraft fire and to traffic."

There was a young girl in the choir
Whose voice went up hour and hour
Till one Sunday night
It went out of sight
And they found it next day in the spoir.

Newspaper Advertising Has Proved Itself Unrivalled

"Of all the three great media of education the press is today the only one which provides a forum for relatively free discussion," said G. Warren Brown, president of Cockfield, Brown & Co., Ltd., advertising agency, at the annual meeting.

Discussing the place of advertising in the present day he said, as follows:

"The prestige of advertising has been enhanced to a degree never before known in a similar period. As the outstanding medium for telling the story of government, of business and of labor, advertising has proven itself unrivaled.

"In my view advertising has, in one year, earned for itself a civil status higher than that many of us conceived, and daring days which might have become wholly unfavorable.

WON NEW LAURELS

Continuing and speaking specifically of advertising, he said:

"I should like to say a word in particular about the press. Of the three great media of propaganda—the press, the radio and the films—the press is today the only one which provides a forum for relatively free discussion.

"If advertising in Canada is trusted because of its integrity, the press of Canada has won universal renown.

"The abuses of the press prevalent in other countries, are the exception in Canada. By its war record—reliable information comprehensively gathered, ably edited, sanely presented — the press has won new laurels."

PRICELESS

Mr. Brown further expressed his opinion:

"I have unlimited faith in the capacity of the average Canadian for straight thinking, provided he or she is properly informed. Lack of information always has been the root of misunderstanding, of suspicion and prejudice, and, in a country as large as ours, the possibility of cleavage in public opinion, disastrous when applied to our national problems in peace as well as in war, is great.

"Here is a stage ideal for the role of advertising and of the press. I predict that Canada, profiting by the experience of war days, will use both in ever-increasing degree.

"Without detracting in any way from the roles which other media will play, I am confident that advertising and press together will render priceless service in affording Canada that middle-of-the-road stability and happiness we all covet."

Brother and Sister in Air Force

L.A.W. INA COFFEY

FLT. SGT. S. E. COFFEY

MR. and Mrs. R. E. Coffey, 3219 Wascana Street, recently entertained their son and daughter seen above, both of whom were home on leave from the R.C.A.F. Leading Airwoman Coffey joined the R.C.A.F. (W.D.) in May, 1942, and following training at Rockcliffe and St. Thomas, has been stationed in the equipment section at No. 18 F.B.S., Clarseholm, Alta. Her brother enlisted in July, 1941. While training at Brandon, he was in the honor guard formed for the visit of the late Duke of Kent when he toured Canada, and had a few words with His Royal Highness. He also trained at Calgary, and is now a wireless air gunner on active service.

General Warns Raids Likely

NEW YORK, May 8 (AP)—Maj.-Gen. Ralph Royce, commandant of the First Air Force Command, declared tonight that the beating the German Luftwaffe has been taking in Africa and Russia makes the possibility of an air raid on the United States "so real and, in my opinion, so immediate we have no right to regard it as less than a probability."

Interviewed by News Comments for Baukhage over the Blue network, General Royce said the Germans had several ways of making the raids—by planes under their own power, by converted freighters which could be used as aircraft carriers, and possibly by submarines bringing in small float planes with folding wings.

"The Nazis have got to have some good news for their own people," he said. "They have been thoroughly licked in Africa and Russia . . . It would help Hitler a lot if he could say to his people, 'German planes are still in the air and strike where they please.'

"A fine story about the bombing of New York's skyscrapers and the Capitol and the White House would help German morale a lot . . . Our truculent daylight bombing of German cities have had their effect on the German people. The German press has already promised reprisals and Goebbels may find he has to make good."

Malta's Church Bells Ring to Mark Victories

VALETTA, Malta, May 8 (CP)—Malta's church bells, silent since Italy entered the war in May, 1940, pealed out triumphant today in celebration of the Allied victory in Tunisia.

One bell which announced the raising of a siege in 1565 added its rhythm to the peal in the beflagged and scarred island, which has stood firm as an Empire outpost in the Mediterranean under the most concentrated air assault in history.

Loses No Time

OTTAWA, May 8 (CP)—Pilot Officer Eddie (Joe) Penner, air gunner from Clarks Crossing, near Saskatoon, set some sort of record for getting into the air after reporting to his Boston bomber squadron in North Africa.

"Two hours after Eddie arrived by air from Great Britain a trip came up and, at his own request, he was given the opportunity of doing his first operational flight in this theatre of war," said R.C.A.F. headquarters.

Penner's comment was: "I liked it fine. The Boston is a swell little kite."

In Penner's crew on his first operational trip was another Canadian, Sergeant A. W. Switzer, of Revelstoke, B.C.

Welles Warns

TOLEDO, O., May 8 (AP)—Sumner Welles, undersecretary of state, declared tonight that repudiation of the Trade Agreements Act in Congress would strike "a heavy blow at hopes for an everlasting end to war.

"If the United States repudiates the Trade Agreements Act, either outright or by crippling amendments, if it thus repudiates the idea of economic nonaggression, it will have destroyed the stuff of which peace is made, it will have struck a heavy blow at the hopes of mankind for ridding this world of the scourge of war and for creating a just, a workable and a lasting peace," he told a forum on peace problems.

Welles spoke only thirty-six hours before the opening of general debate in the House of Representatives on a measure to renew the President's authority to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements, providing for mutual tariff adjustments. The authority first was granted in 1934 and has been twice renewed for three-year periods. Some members of Congress are insisting that the current renewal carry with it a Congressional power to veto any agreements it does not approve.

Duke of Windsor Does Not Recall Rev. R. A. Jardine

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., May 8 (AP)—The Duke of Windsor was told by a reporter today that Rev. Robert Anderson Jardine and his wife had been arrested at Los Angeles on a deportation warrant charging them with over-staying their time in the United States.

The name didn't strike a responsive chord in the Duke's memory until he was reminded that it was Jardine who married him to the former Wallis Warfield, at Cannes, France, in a ceremony several months after Edward renounced the British Throne.

"Oh, yes," the Duke said. "I haven't heard from him in a long time".

The Duke said he knew of nothing that he could do to help Jardine.

WHEN THEY COME BACK

When they come back
If blossoms do—
I always feel a doubt
If blossoms can be born again
When once the art is out

When they begin
If robins may—
I always had a fear
I did not tell, it was their last
Experiment last year

When it is May
If May return—
Had nobody a pang
Lest on a face so beautiful
He might not look again?

If I am there—
One does not know
What party one may be
Tomorrow—but if I am there
I take back all I say.

U.S. Surprised By Quick Win

WASHINGTON, May 8 (AP)—The speed with which Allied troops shattered the Axis bastion of Northern Tunisia brought surprise as well as obvious delight in Washington today.

As described here, the final phase of the fight which resulted in the fall of Tunis and Bizerte appeared to have begun less than a week ago when the British First Army seized [illegible] assault that took Djebel Bou Aoukaz and the Eleventh United States Army Corps swept up Hill 609—thirteen miles southwest of Mateur.

Djebel Bou Aoukaz was the main peg in the German line, and its fall opened the road to Tunis, toward which the First Army turned immediately, seizing Massicault and pocketing the Axis forces around Tebourba between their lines and the Americans swinging down from Mateur.

HAD PEGGED DEFENCE TO "HILL 609"

Similarly, on the 2,000-foot eminence termed by military strategists "Hill 609," the Germans had pegged their defence of the approaches of Bizerte. When that fell, it was only a matter of two days before the United States forces fought their way into Mateur, vital rail and highway junctions of Northern Tunisia.

Below Tunis, what is left of Marshal Erwin Rommel's Africa Korps faces the British Eighth Army and the French troops in a shortened line above Enfidaville and Pont du Fahs. Threatened now from the rear by troops of the First Army in Tunis, withdrawal toward Cap Bon seems their only chance to escape immediate decimation. Even in the peninsula they could hardly hold out long.

Coralbells for Border Plantings

Coralbells are suitable for border plantings or to lend distinction to the rock garden. Belonging to the Saxifragaceae, a large family comprising more than seventy species, this herbaceous perennial and its hybrids hold special interest for the gardener. It is essentially the most dramatic member of the family, while its refinement and pleasing qualities dominate any spot.

This is due, in part, to its habit of growth. The low compact mass of leaves, beautiful in color and pattern, would be decorative even without bloom. They remain green all Winter and sometimes assume tones of red and bronze after a touch of frost. Through the rosette of foliage innumerable wiry stems ending in loose panicles of coral-red flowerets appear. These may reach a height of two feet under favorable conditions.

While it is not difficult to grow, Heuchera sanguinea shows a marked preference for certain conditions of soil and light. If it does not thrive at first it may be shifted about until more suitable conditions are found and will repay with interest any study given its needs. Generally it does well in enriched loam where full morning sunlight is to be had. Partial shade, at least from hot afternoon sun, is desirable, although not essential. Much will depend on the amount of moisture the plant receives and how well the earth is shaded immediately over its surface roots.

As a rock garden subject it is priceless. Once its wants have been determined, pockets of the proper soil can be made. It flourishes among rocks, in spots not too dry, where the roots find necessary moisture and protection. Planted against drifts of dwarf bleeding heart (Dicentra eximia) edged with house leeks (Sempervivum), it gives a distinctive character to the planting. The blooming season is long, from June to September, and the dainty sprays of bells combine admirably in flower arrangements. Heuchera sanguinea is the most familiar variety of the family, but superb hybrids ranging through white, pink, rose and crimson tones deserve wider cultivation. Some of the colors are so electric in quality that a single spray has a rare carrying effect. Here is a small plant with a forceful personality.

Where large spaces in the rock garden are to be covered it is a good choice, due to its habit of spreading. Preferably in August or September plants are divided.

HUGE MILITARY FUNERAL

REYKJAVIK, Iceland, May 8 (AP)—As Taps were sounded, fourteen caskets were lowered into the ground at the American Cemetery this morning when Lieut.-Gen. Frank M. Andrews, Bishop Adna Wright Leonard and their companions who died with them in an airplane crash last Monday were buried.

Flags flew at half-staff in this capital city as the largest military funeral ever held in Iceland took place from Reykjavik's two cathedrals, Protestant and Catholic.

Charles is one of those people who always try to look on the bright side of things. Well, one day he saw a little fellow weeping his eyes out, so he crossed over the road to see if he could help.

"And what's the matter?" he asked.

"Boo-oo," wept the youngster pointing to a broken egg on the ground. "I threw that egg up in the air, but didn't catch it, boo-oo."

"Never mind," said Charles cheerfully, "you'll 'catch it' when you get home."

Modern plant foods are quick acting, and are available to plants before the weather warms up. Well fed in the beginning, plants will soon become sturdy enough to forage more effectively for themselves.

A MARI USQUE AD MARE

A MARI USQUE AD MARE

(From Sea to Sea)

The coat of arms of Canada is a development of the great seal designed shortly after Confederation and approved by royal warrant in 1868. The arms are those of our mother races—the English, Scottish, Irish and French—surmounted by the imperial crown. The crest, just below the crown, is a lion holding in its paw a red maple leaf, symbolic of Canada's sacrifices in the last war. The supporters, to left and right, are the lion and unicorn of the royal arms; the lion upholds the Union Jack, the unicorn the ancient banner of France.

The motto—A MARI USQUE AD MARE—is an extract from the Latin version of the eighth verse of the 72nd psalm—"He shall have dominion also from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth."

"From sea to sea" our sons have taken up arms against the forces of evil. Many, by now, have crossed other seas, strange and far away. Many are fighting in remote corners of the earth. And in the long hours of loneliness or danger, three things sustain them ... Faith in their cause ... Hope for the future ... Love of their land. ✦ Let us, at home, put our effort behind their faith ... let us keep their hope burning with our work and thrift ... let us make our land worthy of their love and pride. ✦ Let us stand united in the purchase of Victory Bonds ... war bonds, now ... but bonds of peace when our victorious sons come home again. ✦ Our share in the new Victory Loan will be the measure of our loyalty, not only to our country, but to those countrymen of ours who, day in and day out, are at grips with the foe. Canada calls on us to back their attack by purchasing Victory Bonds to the limit!

NEXT me on Jeff's Barber Shop in Manipeka there sat this morning a country feller, at a guess, from thirty-five to sixty-five years old. "Were you out at the sale at Crittenden's yesterday?" he asked.

I didn't know whether that meant a lot or a little. But the audience in the barber shop did. "Much?" they said.

"Yes sir, a buggy six years old and with a broken tire, for thirty dollars more than it cost ten years ago."

"There was an old Jersey wagon there," said a man from across the room, "fetched a hundred and fifty dollars."

JAPAN'S WAR NOTICE

LONDON (Reuter) [illegible] that she was going to war with the Axis [illegible] formal notice to the League of Nations ten years ago, said Dr. George K. C. Yeh, London director of the Chinese Ministry of Information. [illegible]

How do you see [illegible] asked the young [illegible]. "With one [illegible] or two."

"The other man stared. 'Well [illegible] he said at last. 'If [illegible] are going [illegible] as we go the [illegible] him!'"

"Dina Cashman"

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

CHAPTER XXIV

"There's one thing about my wife," Andrew Havens told Dina, "she's completely unpredictable. She says herself she's like a little girl who's discovered happiness for the first time in her life. She hates to hurt anyone and she hates anyone to be cross at her.

[illegible] half-smile and in obvious satisfaction while a salad was passed and presently said in a confidential undertone:

"When we met each other," he continued as Dina listened, absorbed, "I'd just arrived here in California; I didn't know any of these people, and I didn't know that Aline was engaged to Rogers. She didn't tell me! Didn't see the consideration there, Miss Cashman? She didn't want to hurt Rogers Holland, humiliate him. It wasn't until after we were married that she told me that she had had to break it off with him, and then—"

He paused impressively, took a swallow of wine.

"Then she said," he resumed "that the very first dinner engagement we made must be note, she wanted Mr. Holland to know me and me to know him; there mustn't be any hint, feelings or shadows of anything unexplained. That, I think," Andrew finished with satisfaction, "gives you a pretty good idea of what she's really like. It's—" he spoke reverently, "it's angelic!" he said.

Dina drank nothing. She had been feeling plausibly upset all day, and dared risk only a little chicken and some salad accompanied by the dry, crisp crackers and toasted breads which all these eating and drinking folk seemed to feel were helpful to reducing. It was therefore in a state of chill and weakness favorable for the wildest apprehension that she found herself accompanying the other women upstairs.

An enormous bedroom filled with comfortable chairs brightened by a wild fire had been placed at their disposal.

Dina sat in a big chair, sunken back into the protection of its depths, watching the other women, listening to them, managing never quite to catch anyone's eye. But Aline, powdering her nose, touching the shining, flawless helmet of her black hair with a ringed hand, had no notion of letting her escape.

"How long have you known Rogers, Miss Cashman?"

"Not very long," Dina answered hesitantly.

"Your people's friend?"

She smiled demurely.

"I hope so."

Aline rose, strolled across the room, stood at the hearth looking down at Dina.

"Tell me something about yourself," she said winningly. "You see, I happen to know Rogers Holland extremely well. In fact, I was engaged to him."

"He told me," Dina said.

"So it seemed odd," Aline went on, [illegible] "when he never met, never heard about you."

"Well," Aline [illegible] sat a short hand, some young woman who had been complaining bitterly of her slippers and now had them off and was [illegible] one attractively. I can imagine myself being engaged to a man, and even breaking the engagement with an explanation [illegible] absolutely everyone [illegible]."

"Certainly," Aline agreed, sharply resenting the reflection upon her [illegible] "but I'm simplified, that's all. What did he tell you about me?" she demanded with an amused glance about the circle.

"That you were engaged and that you married someone else," Dina answered simply.

"I think you have the rottenest manners, Aline, I've ever seen in my entire life," the stout woman said dreamily, trying on a slipper and wincing.

"Rogers told me you asked him to give this party," another woman said reproachfully. "I think it was wonderful of Rogers to do it after the way you treated him."

"How did I treat him, Lucy?" Aline asked, not opening her eyes.

"Well," began Lucy uncertainly. Dina could tell from her tone that she was a good-natured soul who disliked fomenting trouble. "I mean, you did throw him down pretty hard," she said; "the wedding date all set and everything. And we all know, no matter who you happen to be married to, that Rogers just blindly adores you."

"Can't help that," Aline opened her eyes, looked into space with the hint of a self-concious smile on her lips. "I met Andy," she said eloquently.

"I met Andy!" Dina heard old Mrs. Prince mutter under her breath.

"Do you like him?" Aline was now demanding. "Now, tell me, everybody, don't you think he's really—no, but I mean, isn't he really divine?"

"Magnificent," someone said obligingly.

Orders Cut in U.S. Beef Price

WASHINGTON, May 8 (AP)—Price Administrator Prentiss Brown announced here he is ordering a 10-per-cent reduction, effective June 1, in retail prices of beef, veal, pork, lamb, mutton, coffee and butter in the United States.

The cut, Brown said, will be in comparison with present prices and means downward revision of meat prices becoming effective May 17.

Brown's announcement constituted the first specific action in line with his promise about a week ago to roll back the cost of living.

Brown said that he was recommending to the President of [illegible] that subsidy payments be made to producers of the commodities covered by the rollback, [illegible] at no cost to consumers.

[illegible] were reported that [illegible] marked approximately [illegible] of [illegible] in comparison [illegible] the time [illegible] the rollback [illegible] according to Price Administrator [illegible].

PUNCH—"WHERE EAST MEETS WEST"

In India [illegible] making their [illegible] but never when they are [illegible]

"Can all [illegible] do it?" asks [illegible]

Behind [illegible] the face of the Indian, he nods enthusiastically and from then on all is smooth drinking.

The reason is that our word "punch" is pronounced the same as the Eastern word for this beverage. Not only that, it derives from the Hindu [illegible]

"Five" is in this picture because the "punch" which made its way from this part of the world into Europe during the seventeenth century was composed of five ingredients: spice or [illegible], lemon juice, sugar, wine or spirits and hot water or milk.

The recipe varied with time, place and pocketbook of the mixer but was always flavorful.

Sixty-eight different ways of making punch are described in an old work entitled "How to Mix Drinks"—not a bad way to wile away the warm days in India.

VICTORIA FLYERS CAPTURE DOMINION CAGE TITLE

Glancing Over Sport—

By JOE DELAHUNTY

IT'S MOTHER'S DAY TODAY

Ninety out of 100 sports fans would think that I would start this column today talking about the Canadian Victoria Flyers victory in the Canadian cage final, the defeat of the R.A.F. in the Province Cup soccer match by Vancouver Pro Recs; Count Fleet's victory in a gallop in the Preakness, or the opening of the local baseball season, but, not in my books this day. All we have to do this morning and through the rest of the day is to remember one pal and that pal, ladies and gentlemen, is your mother. Don't forget your mother she is the best pal you and me have ever had in our lives.

Today is Mother's Day, so let's hope that we all realize this particular day is upon us, and we all take time out to pay respects and pass congratulations along to one person we all adore on this day—Our Mothers.

ODDS AND ENDS

[illegible] the ball park yesterday afternoon and parked along the line of base bleachers along with my pal Gerry Bill Cosens, an ardent ball fan if there ever was one, to take in the opening game of the flag chase.

The weather man didn't exactly play ball with the boys and therefore the turnout was in the neighborhood of 500. The opening [illegible] the Army Band rendering music as they paraded around the field, the teams lining up down the base lines in V formation and then Major General Pope started out to the mound to toss the first pitch with Anderman Drew McTavish on the receiving end and Flying Officer Roy Harris at bat who played hard to win for the sons of Canada long before Hitler and his gangsters set out with the foolish idea that they could conquer the world. Twice the major general tried to toss that drop ball of his and both times it failed to cross the plate. The result was that Roy went [illegible] times. Although I didn't talk to Harris during the afternoon, it was great to see him enjoying himself at the ball park. I must have brought back memories of the days he played the Sons to victories when on the Hawk and the many times he played in the outfield for the league champions of that time, so to Flying Officer Roy Harris this is my department salute. Welcome home. Doug Peden looked smart at first base for the Army and it could be plainly seen by his movements that he has had good schooling in the diamond game. Ray Cave, Army hurler, started off the season by amazing two batters and then [illegible] a few innings. Both [illegible] a longer career in [illegible] trips to the plate.

FROM HERE AND THERE

The winner of the Derby was Wee Gee Speed, Jug Gee Speed. Didn't [illegible] a single weekend.

There is no [illegible] the Arsenal Pirates. He was in the Pacific coast, and he is in Beacon Park now, we go.

Had a letter from Harry Scott who for twenty five years has been sports editor of The Calgary Albertan [illegible] a few months ago [illegible] the Army [illegible] and [illegible] Alberta [illegible] the Commission in the Army Cup series and I quote: "Mind you that Victoria Army has got some hockey and all the odd breaks could have been champions. If they had been [illegible] they would [illegible] during the first period of the final it would have made a great difference. The boys made a lot of friends here and were a credit to Victoria and the army they represented. I spent quite a few [illegible] with Gerry, the army star, the [illegible]. Management of the Palmer Hotel informed me that they were the most gentlemanly lot of athletes that ever stopped there. Nice Mets and the best power to you in your [illegible] Winter. Don't forget to bring also to your Victoria to September for the new season, due to start another rattling but will be out [illegible] as soon as the war ends. Best regards to [illegible] and [illegible] Sgt. Thomas."

Thanks Harry for the nice letter and your interesting notes on our Army hockey team. Ran into Chuck Rayner, former goal tender for Detroit, defeated New York and Brooklyn Americans and more recently Navy net custodian and he's still talking about that trip the boys had down south. "It was great," he said, "the hospitality was grand and can those Bermuda boys ever play hockey," says Chuck. Doug and Max he stated as he rushed away to rejoin some of his shipmates.

BEARS WIN TRACK MEET

LOS ANGELES, May 8 (AP)—California's Golden Bears had no trouble at all today ending the seventeen year jinx on track and field that Southern California has held over them. Coach A. Ragains boys round up 89½ points to 40½ for the Trojans.

In another dual meet between the Bears and the Bruins of U.C.L.A. run simultaneously, California scored 112 points and U.C.L.A. 19.

John Pinton, Stanford University sophomore, running a special event, the 660 yard run, established a new American record 1 minute 18.9 seconds. The former mark was set by Homer Baker of the Milrose A.C. at Travers Island, September 26, 1914. The old mark was 1 minute 20.4 seconds.

Hotel and Coach Trundlers Win

With Bill Norris setting the pace George Hotel trundlers moved into the final round of the Senior City Tenpin League play-offs at the Arcade Alleys yesterday afternoon by defeating Poodle Dog Cafe in the semis, three games to two. Norris ushered the timber into the pins for a total of 905 but he was closely followed by the rest of his teammates.

In the Commercial Tenpin League semi finals Coach and Horses eliminated the Yankees in three straight games, two of them keenly fought and the other just a walkaway. They will meet Douglas Cafe for the Dunsmuir Cup in the final in the best of five games next week at the Arcade Alleys.

George Hotel takes the runaway against the Arcades in the final this week for the Senior City League honors and this pair should be interesting from the time the first ball heads for the pins. Red Lawson was only six pins behind Norris with a score of 899. [illegible] Wesch was [illegible] 882 and Stan Duncan came [illegible] with a total of 850. Edgar Bonde was also right up with 844 opposite his name. For the losers Ron Wilson was top by a good margin with 904 while Bob Semple was next with 859.

North Shore and Boeings Play to Scoreless Draw

BALL TROUBLES FIXED

SEATTLE, May 8 (AP)—Professional player troubles of the Northwest Shipyards Baseball League were straightened out today.

Questions had arisen suddenly over the status of Hal Spindel and Alan Strange, managers of Seattle entries. Bill Mulligan, Seattle Rainiers manager, reported a telegram from Judge W. A. Bramham, minor leagues executive, warning against the use of outlaw professional players.

Developments today indicated that neither Strange nor Spindel, who [illegible] organized baseball, [illegible] were in that class. Spindel received notice that he had been granted the voluntary retirement status which he had requested, and Strange was informed that the St. Louis Browns had asked Baseball Commissioner K. M. That's the situation, men and women of Vancouver Island---and it's a serious situation, BUT WE CAN LICK IT and WE MUST LICK IT!

Thousands of you have done splendidly. In the spirit of Real sacrifice you have put savings you would have loved to spend on other things into the Loan, and while your present action proves your patriotism, the future will prove your wisdom and prudence.

The price of attack is high. Past Victory Loans have financed our War Effort—but this Loan is for the purpose of financing a greater effort—the effort needed not just for defence, but for ATTACK. That's why our quota is 40% greater than the entire amount we subscribed in the Third Victory Loan—that's why we must ask you to lend MORE and MORE and MORE!

The hardworking salesmen have now practically completed their calls—the first "round" is over, but we are still far short of ringing the bell of Victory. These same men will call on you again this coming week in the hope that the same spirit which prompted you to buy one bond will induce you to buy another. But to you who have not been called upon by a salesman, and who may still be missed in this gigantic task, we say

CALL YOUR VICTORY LOAN H'DQ'RS—SEE YOUR BANKER

Take your Banker's advice about your savings. Victory Bonds are the safest of all investments. Any Banker will tell you that it is poor business to leave money in a Bank earning only 1½% interest, when the Government, on whose stability the safety of the very Banks themselves is dependent, offers to pay you 3%.

We know the money is here—we know the quota can be reached, easily, but with only six working days to go WE ARE STILL $4,144,750.00 SHORT OF OUR OBJECTIVE.

And Now Here Are the Actual Figures to Date---What Are YOU Going to do About It?
Every Single Bond Helps---EVERY POSSIBLE DOLLAR MUST BE MOBILIZED!

Your Health and Your Weight

Jas. W. Barton, M.D.

FOODS NEEDED BY THE UNDERNOURISHED

Recently I spoke of an experiment on rats which were kept for twenty-seven generations on a uniform diet, showing that the rats must have been in good health to have lived their normal span (two years). Yet, by simply increasing the proportion of milk in the diet there was an improvement in the general health and condition of the rats. There was more rapid and efficient growth, lower death rate, higher vitality at all ages, an increase of 10 per cent in the average life span of the adults and a greater extension of the "prime of life" that is they matured earlier and old age was delayed.

The point is that rats who were healthy could be stronger, healthier and live longer by a simple addition to the diet.

What about human beings? Can diet make any difference to the health death rate and life span? I have spoken before of the two tribes in Africa one of which lived mostly on meats, blood of animals, and milk and the other mostly on green vegetables and cereals. The meat-eating tribe were taller, stronger and braver.

I have also spoken before of the work of Major-General Sir Robert McCarrison, of the Indian Medical Service, and his researches into the diets of the different races there. Dr. McCarrison examined the diets of six different races and the results show how important for any race are first-class proteins (meat, fish, fowl), vitamins and minerals. The lack of these three factors leads to malnutrition, weakness and underweight.

In his book, "Food and Physical Fitness," Dr. E. W. H. Cruikshank, professor of physiology, University of Aberdeen, states that lack of proteins, vitamins and minerals is more ... it is a threat to life." Nothing is more calculated to take the joy out of life than malnutrition (undernourishment) for every function of the body, every phase of existence can be hindered or harmed by lack of the amounts and kinds of necessary foods. Dr. Cruikshank admits that other factors affect the nutrition of the body that is lack of sleep, infection, wrong home surroundings. Hereditary influences can be removed and the hardships of surroundings better withstood by communities and races if attention be paid to the correct feeding of mothers and children.

Speaking of British diets undernourishment is caused by a steady diet of white bread, cereals and tea to which are added potatoes and occasionally small amounts of meat of poor quality. If we substitute coffee for tea, the above diet would be the regular diet for many families in Canada.

What then are the foods in which undernourished children and adults are in most need to build them up not so much in weight but in health and strength?

First and most important are the proteins, particularly the animal proteins: meat, eggs, fish, poultry and milk. In addition to being body builders, proteins with their juices stimulate the appetite and digestion.

Another important foodstuff lacking in the diet of most undernourished individuals is mineral salts. The mineral salts have little or no fuel value but are of vital importance to the growth and well being of the individual. They enter largely into the formation of bone and are equally important in forming a part of the brain tissue. Foods rich in mineral salts are meats, milk and dairy products, eggs, green vegetables, cereals and fruits.

Vitamins are also important in the upbuilding diet, but making sure of some brewer's yeast and cod liver oil daily would prevent any lack of vitamins in undernourished children and adults.

FAT IS A VALUABLE FOOD

If we fully realized why Nature permits the accumulation of fat in and on the body, we would have great respect for fat tissue. In the early days of man when he had to hunt for food, he was sometimes unable to get food for hours and often days at a time. This would be because he was unable to find food or because animals larger and stronger than he prevented him from obtaining it when he did find it. This is where Nature came to his rescue by enabling him to store fat on his body to serve as food when he was unable to get food.

To show how far-seeing is Nature fat was the tissue chosen to supply nourishment because it is the richest food available in proportion to size or amount. Fat gives twice as much heat or energy as do protein or carbohydrate tissue. It requires less storage space in the body. Fat is reserve food or fuel for the human body or human furnace.

Fat is a reserve of fuel for the human furnace which by day and night maintains the heat and energy of the body. When the body demands more heat and uses more energy than the daily intake of food provides, then the furnace draws upon its reserve supplies.

Where is the store of fat located in the body? The largest storage depot in the body is immediately beneath the skin and may be more than an inch in thickness. Other storage depots are about the abdominal organs, the covering of the heart and the yellow bone marrow.

In his book "Obesity," Dr. W. P. Christie points out other important uses of fat in the body, including control of body temperature which prevents loss of heat in cold weather, keeping abdominal organs up in their proper position, provides cushions for the nerves and by covering the bony angles of the body makes the human figure more attractive.

I have spoken before of the great protection given three important organs, the kidneys, by fat tissue which provides a soft resting place and protection from violence without. Although there are many cases of damaged kidneys due to blows in football, hockey and other games or to injury from falls, the soft mass of fat in which the kidneys lie prevents damage to kidneys in the great majority of accidents.

The fact that there are these fat depots throughout the body does not mean that there is no fat in the tissue themselves. As a matter of fact fat is found in most of the tissues and is used in the general upkeep of the body. This is called fixed fat and is always present in the same amount in the tissues whether the individual is a small or large eater. "About one-quarter of the dry weight of men who have starved to death consists of fatty acids."

An examination of the human brain, lungs, heart, muscle and spleen reveals the presence of some fat, but this fat is in use in the structure of these organs. They do not contain any free or storage fat. However, the liver, which is called the "king of the organs," has been fixed fat to be used in maintaining its structure and helping in the various jobs done by the liver, but also some storage or free fat which can be called on to provide heat and energy when the body is not getting enough fat or foods to form fat from the daily food intake.

It is the knowledge that Nature provides fat storage depots that enables physicians to reduce weight in the overweights. He simply provides a diet that contains little or no fat food, provides enough carbohydrates (potatoes and bread) to give heat and energy but not enough left over to be stored as fat, and enough proteins (meat, fish, eggs) to maintain the structure of the body tissues and replace worn tissue. The balance of the food needed to give the heat and energy necessary is provided by or taken away from the fat storage places throughout the body.

Unique Method For South Africa Overseas Voting

Soldiers' Vote for Parties, Not Men

CAPETOWN (CP)—South Africa at the coming general election will make use of a unique method for this country with the new system whereby ... overseas and in South Africa must vote for parties instead of individuals.

It has been decided that in view of the diverse home addresses of men making up various units, the usual system of balloting for individual candidates will be impossible.

Soldiers, sailors and airmen will be given a ballot paper containing the names of all parties and independent candidates. This will be marked with the full name, date and birthplace of the service man voting. The envelopes will then be dispatched to the central electoral bureau in Pretoria.

By means of a file index system, the votes will be endorsed with the constituency wherein the soldier was registered. After the count is taken, electoral officers in constituencies will be instructed by telegraph to add so many votes to those given for various party candidates in their constituencies.

Opposition Claims

Opposition groups have not yet managed to arrange a unifying group programme as the Afrikaner party is demanding several Nationalist seats and Oswald Pirow, Nationalist leader, is represented as "not interested in democratic government and the parliamentary system."

The Labor party is claiming six United (Government) party seats and planning a big offensive against the "dominionites" entrenched in the Durban area.

Minister of Railways F. C. Sturrock has assumed control of all motor vehicles under regulations gazetted, helped by an advisory committee of nine, including controllers of rubber, petrol, oil and vehicles, representatives of railways, road transportation board, municipal passenger services, private passenger services and military forces. An executive council of three is being formed by the minister, who hopes to drastically curtail all transportation, including use of private cars.

Armed Politics

What is described as "political robbery" by an anti-war organization was the hold-up and theft of £12,000 ($54,000) by armed men in military uniforms at Johannesburg station. Two railway clerks were forced to surrender the money.

Prime Minister Smuts has promised the Assembly there will be a thorough public inquiry into alleged riots in Langsburg, Cape Province, where as a train full of non-European (Negro) troops drew into the station a number of them, under the influence of liquor, assaulted and threw stones and fruit at civilians.

In Port Elizabeth district a major step in the emancipation of natives is being tried. At a New Brighton native village the post of medical officer has been filled by the appointment of a native doctor with a salary of £360 a year, plus free housing.

Wartime trade across the South Atlantic is increasing. In the first two months of 1943 South Africa jumped into third place for exports from Argentina. Argentine imports from South Africa are nearly nine times greater than last year.

The Wolf and The Shepherds

One of Æsop's fables says a wolf passing by, saw some shepherds in a hut eating for their dinner a haunch of mutton. Approaching them he said: "What a clamor you would raise if I were to do as you are doing."

Men are too apt to condemn in others the very things they practise themselves.

The Arrow And the Song

I shot an arrow into the air
It fell to earth, I knew not where,
For, so swiftly it flew, the sight
Could not follow it in its flight.

I breathed a song into the air
It fell to earth, I knew not where,
For who has sight so keen and strong
That it can follow the flight of song?

Long, long afterward, in an oak
I found the arrow, still unbroke;
And the song, from beginning to end
I found again in the heart of a friend.

New York Stocks

NEW YORK, May 8 (AP)—The stock market finished the week on a brisk recovery note today as the heavy sellers of Friday turned buyers and bid up many favorites fractions to more than a point. There were few wider jumps.

Rails, weakest in the Friday tumble, were among the first to come back after a somewhat mixed opening. Steels, motors, farm implements, utilities and specialties were quick to follow and most closed around their highs.

The Associated Press average of sixty stocks was up .5 of a point at 60.7, retrieving all but .2 of the Friday recession. On the week the barometer issued a net gain of 1.1 points. Transfers of 1,063,210 shares were the largest for a Saturday since December 27, 1941, and compared with 843,650 a week ago. The week's aggregate was 7,915,490 shares, the largest since the week ending May 18, 1940.

Holiday on Farms

VANCOUVER, May 8 (CP)—Major Gen. G. R. Pearkes, general officer commanding-in-chief, Pacific Command, today issued a statement calling on civilians to take their vacations working on farms.

"There are no holidays for the men on the fighting fronts, but you can make your civilian furloughs count on their behalf," he said. "You can make a pitchfork as effective as a bayonet."

That Body of Yours

By JAMES W. BARTON, M.D.

SYMPTOMS AND SIGNS OF FOOD DEFICIENCY

In Great Britain the Ministry of Health proudly states that because of the rationing of foods the British women are now more shapely, have better figures. This is because they are eating more of the foods that give energy and less of the foods that cause storage of fat in and on the body.

In the United States, as in all countries today, special research work on foods and nutrition is being done in various localities.

In order that the general public and physicians also, may recognize early the symptoms and signs of insufficient or wrong diet, the subcommittee on Research, Council makes known some of its findings in The Journal of the American Medical Association.

Symptoms of food deficiency (insufficient in amount or kinds) are: 1. Lack of appetite. 2. Tiredness all the time. 3. Loss of weight. 4. Lack of mental application. 5. Loss of strength. 6. History of sore mouth and tongue. 7. Chronic diarrhoea. 8. Nervousness and irritability. 9. Burning, prickling and loss of feeling in parts of the skin. 10. Night blindness. 11. Fear of light. 12. Burning or itching of eyes. 13. A great flow of tears from eyes. 14. Pains in muscles and joints. 15. Sore bleeding gums. 16. Bleed easily.

Among the signs of early deficiency in nutrition are: 1. Blackheads or pores of thickened oil around the nose and lips. 2. Sores at corners of mouth. 3. Sore gums. 4. Changes in color and texture of the tongue. 5. [illegible] 6. Spongy bleeding gums. 7. Tenderness of muscles. 8. Black spots on skin (purpura). 9. Inflammation of the skin in special parts—face, neck and groin. 10. Thickening of the skin over bony parts. 11. "Beaded" chest (little lumps like beads where ribs meet the chest bone in front). 12. Thin blood and it is not enriched by the use of iron. 13. Bloodshot eyes. 14. Inflammation of eyelids.

Now it is possible to have a number of these symptoms and signs and not be suffering from food deficiency but where any of them are present it would be well to consult the family physician and outline your "usual" daily and weekly diet.

As mentioned before, most of us could keep free of deficiency symptoms by using more dairy products and one raw vegetable daily.

He wanted to join the army, but the medical officer grimaced when he discovered that the would-be [illegible] hearing was far from perfect.

But surely good eyesight is more important," replied the young man, and mine is fine!"

The doctor switched on the radio set and a man's voice came through. "What is that?" asking the doctor wishing to test the applicant's hearing again. "Oh, er, I can't just hear him," replied the young fellow, "but he's wearing a dark grey suit!"

Little Stories for Bedtime

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

HOW PETER RABBIT WAS SET FREE

At the sight of Welcome Robin Peter Rabbit suddenly changed his mind about coming out of his hiding place in the old stone wall on the edge of the Old Orchard.

My, what a narrow escape," said Peter to himself. "If it hadn't been for Welcome Robin I certainly would have been caught by Black Pussy. What a funny thing for me that Welcome happened to come over here just when he did. I guess I owe my life to Welcome, and I'll never forget it. I wonder how much longer that dreadful cat is going to keep me a prisoner here. Hello! What is going on out there now, I wonder?

What was going on was just this. Welcome Robin was scolding Black Pussy at the top of his lungs. Other little people in the Old Orchard heard him and hurried over to see what he was making such a fuss about. As soon as they saw Black Pussy they added their voices to the racket. Sammy Jay, Drummer the Woodpecker, Clacker the Crackle, Bully the English Sparrow, Tommy Tit the Chickadee and even gentle Winsome Bluebird did his best to tell Black Pussy what he thought of her. They even darted down very close to Black Pussy and made dreadful threats of picking her eyes out, but they took the greatest care not to get too near. Black Pussy paid not the least attention to them, save that the tip of her black tail twitched angrily. All the screaming and harsh things they could say wouldn't hurt her, and she knew it.

Presently Farmer Brown's boy came out of the barn. Of course he heard the racket the birds were making, and, of course, he was interested right away. He long ago had learned that when a lot of birds get together and scream that way there is always a reason. For a few minutes he stood still and watched the darting down toward the ground and then back up to the trees, and all the time screaming as if they were trying to split their throats.

I wonder," said Farmer Brown's boy, "if Mr. Blacksnake is over there? I think I'll have a look. I simply can't have him bothering my little feathered friends."

He walked slowly toward the place where the birds were so excited and presently he saw Black Pussy. "So it's you, is it, Puss?" said he. "You really ought to know better than to scare my friends so. I am afraid I shall have to punish you if you don't keep away from the Old Orchard."

Then he saw that Black Pussy wasn't paying the least bit of attention to the birds, but was keeping her eyes fastened on an opening in the old stone wall. He knew right away that that meant that there was someone in there, and that she was waiting for him to come out.

"Probably It Is Chatterer the Red Squirrel or Striped Chipmunk," Thought He

"Probably it is Chatterer the Red Squirrel or Striped Chipmunk," thought he. "In either case, it won't do to let Black Pussy catch them."

So he walked over to Black Pussy and picked her up. He scolded her as he took her over to the dooryard. Then he put her down and cried "Scat!" Black Pussy ran a little way and then sat down to watch Farmer Brown's boy. He went back to the old stone wall and peeped in at the opening between the stones, but it was dark inside and he couldn't see anyone. Then he lifted off one of the big stones and this let the light in. There crouched Peter Rabbit!

Hello, you little brown scamp!" exclaimed Farmer Brown's boy, in surprise. "What are you doing up here in the Old Orchard? I'd like to know? Don't you know that if you go where you have no business you are bound to get into trouble sooner or later? I guess it's a lucky thing for you that I came over here to find out what was going on."

He reached in and very gently picked Peter up. Peter kicked a little, but Farmer Brown's boy held him firmly and Peter found that it was of no use to struggle. Farmer Brown's boy smoothed Peter's coat with one hand and there was something in that touch that seemed to remove all fear from Peter. He didn't know what would happen to him next, but somehow he felt sure that it would be nothing bad. Farmer Brown's boy carried him across the Old Orchard to the edge of the Green Meadows. Then he headed him toward the dear Old River Patch and put him down. "Now run along home, you scamp, and tell Mrs. Peter all about your wonderful adventures," said he.

And Peter did. He ran lippety-lippety-up as fast as ever he could, and Farmer Brown's boy laughed to see him go.

Claims Talking to Dice Influences Them

When the gambler rolls the dice and cries, "Come seven, come eleven!" and wishes hard for the numbers, does he have any effect on the "bones"? He thinks he does, but can't get any physicist to believe it. Dr. J. P. Rhine, of Duke University, has been making some tests which convince him that there may be more in the wishful thinking than the scientific world believes and so he speaks of the "PK" or the "psychokinetic effect."

At Duke, experiments have been conducted for nine years with subjects who tried to influence the fall of dice. The results are presented in The Journal of Parapsychology by Dr. Rhine and his wife, Dr. Louisa E. Rhine. This department is informed that twenty-four similar reports are ready for publication, with more to come.

It was a young gambler who first suggested the PK dice throwing tests. Challenged to make good his claim that he could influence the throw, he did well enough to interest Dr. Rhine in a programme of research.

In the first study, "high-dice" tests alone were made. That is, the subject had to cause as many high combinations of eight and above to turn up as he could. In 662 runs, each consisting of twelve throws of a pair, the subjects scored 300 more high combinations than chance expectation would allow. The odds against such a result are trillions to one.

The skeptic will at once ask: Were the dice crooked? The answer is that in a three run sequence the score averages declined so far that the third run was little better than chance. The extra hits occurred almost entirely in the first run and declined with the second.

Was the throwing tricky? Machines were used for the best runs.

Dr. Rhines himself warns against too hasty a decision of PK's existence and insists on more tests by others. If it turns out that there is a PK effect, gambling ought to be less attractive than it is. Who wants to throw dice with a man who can influence the score?

Versatility of Patrol Planes

WASHINGTON (UP).—Big, lumbering patrol bombers, once among the slowest planes that fly, are being developed into a night offensive weapon whose worth was drastically shown at Midway and in other Pacific battles.

At one time patrol fleets were rarely operated without fighter escort, but now they operate independently, and are the aircraft which have proved their versatility most spectacularly in this war. Constantly improved as a result of their operation on every ocean, they have effected rescues under most adverse conditions and have sunk dozens of submarines.

The renaissance in patrol bomber operation has resulted in their use on projects for which it was long thought they were not fitted. Improvement in design has kept pace with their wider utility, until now there is almost no land or sea operation on which they can not be used.

Bombardiers are enthusiastic about the ease with which patrol planes glide toward Japanese surface targets often from great heights and with the necessary speed for successful torpedoing.

Patrol planes are multi-engined craft weighing from 30,000 to 140,000 pounds. They usually are smaller than bombers and almost without exceptions have two engines of from 1,000 to 2,000 h.p.

Speed is more important with this ship than its ability to operate at high altitudes. It must also be adequately protected have power-operated gun turrets, armor and self-sealing fuel cells.

One daring rescue made in a patrol plane on the Greenland ice cap by Lieut. A. Y. Parunak, who flew out the thirteen-man crew of a Flying Fortress that had crashed, illustrates the versatility of this craft. Observing that a "dimple" on the ice cap was filling with water from the icy slopes that cupped it, Lieut. Parunak landed when the lake was less than two miles in length, barely long enough for the plane to take off at that 4,200-foot altitude. The day after the rescue the lake had disappeared.

Bring Back the Sun

This evening, just at supper-time,
Some clouds came rolling high
And blotted, with cumulus grandeur,
The sun from out the sky.

Joan gazed with frank disapproval
At what the clouds had done,
And asked me if it were my wish
That she bring back the sun.

I was puzzled, so I asked her
How on earth she thought that she Could do this, and she answered,
"Why, I'd climb our cherry tree.

"I'd get a great long stick, you know,
The longest I could see,
And push those clouds right out of sight
From the top of the cherry tree

"I'd push them down behind those trees
We see out over there
And then the sun could shine again
He'd be all clean and bare".

Mervyn Dutton Given Big Post

MONTREAL, May 8 (CP).—Appointment of Mervyn (Red) Dutton as managing director of the National Hockey League was announced here today following conclusion of the league's two-day annual meeting.

Mr. Dutton, former manager of the Brooklyn Americans, had been acting president of the league since the death several months ago of Frank Calder, who led the circuit for a quarter-century.

The announcement made no mention of a new president and it was learned that the league would be operated for the next year, at least—perhaps for the duration—by Mr. Dutton and the two-man executive appointed after Mr. Calder's death. The members are Lester Patrick, of New York Rangers and Maj. E. W. Bickle, of Toronto Maple Leafs.

There were two changes in the six-man board of governors. Senator Donat Raymond, of Montreal Canadiens succeeded L. Peto, of Montreal, while Art Ross of Boston Bruins, replaced R. F. Duncan, Boston.

The balance of the board remained unchanged as follows: James Norris, Detroit Red Wings; Maj. Bickle, Toronto Maple Leafs; Mr. Patrick, New York Rangers, and W. J. Tobin, Chicago Black Hawks.

HOMES BURNED

TRENTON, N.J., May 8 (AP).—At least twenty-one homes and summer bungalows and several smaller buildings at Point Pleasant Borough were destroyed today in a three-hour forest fire and Mayor Harry Roe said the damage would run as high as $100,000.

The fire at Point Pleasant was one of four which swept across Central New Jersey today. Three of them, all in the shore area, were brought under control this evening, but a fourth, at Jamesburg, continued unchecked.

Because He Was Shy

By Ruth Wilkinson Tucker

SHE sat perched on the ceiling of the [illegible] "I'd like you to break my heart," said Nancianna. Michael gasped. "It would be a tremendous favor," she pleaded. The man looked at her and the girl looked back. Michael Brown had come home after fourteen years to look into those brown eyes under their tangle of black lashes.

"I curl 'em," volunteered Nancianna.

"That," he decided, "is a flagrant prevarication. Your hair always curled, even when you were ten."

Nancianna had a gamin's grin. "Still too chivalrous to call a lady a liar? That dates you, Mike. My eyelashes, I mean."

"You curl your eyelashes?"

"Of course. There are lots of things you don't know yet, Michael. Even if you did win the Nobel Prize."

It was the first time he had laughed since he had entered his home town that morning and come to this ramshackle old house where he had lived as the son of the town drunkard until he had arrived at a bitter seventeen.

The house had a dilapidated, down-at-the-heels look. The color was wrong and the style was wrong and it was on the wrong side of the railroad tracks in a little southern town old enough to have created tracks as the dividing line between respectability and obscurity.

Way out at the other end of town was a house which, twenty years before the Civil War, had sat proudly aloof on a hill of its own, surveying its neighbors across an expanse of rolling velvety terraces. Everything about that house was right. Nancianna had come from there.

Almost as far back as Michael could remember, there had been Nancianna. When all the "nice" children had been forbidden to play with him, Nancianna had evaded her mother to tag adoringly at Michael's heels or sit patiently in his evil-smelling basement "laboratory." And something proud and shy and aching in Michael had been comforted a little.

It had been Nancianna who returned with him when his father died, who said good-bye to him when he left Terrytown. "I'll write," she had promised, weeping bitterly. "And when you're great and famous, you'll come back, won't you?"

"I'll never come back," said Michael. And then hastily, "All right. Don't cry like that. I'll come back some time."

Her letters had been the only mail he received during that first overworked, tortured blissful year at Tech. But they stopped, finally.

Gradually success both at college and later, taught him to lose his shyness. But the thought of Terrytown continued to have the power to make him feel like the wrong side of the tracks.

But now he had come back. Terrytown had called him—a lad. And then he had looked up to see Nancianna coming up the path, carrying herself proudly. She smiled at him. "Hello," she said. "Welcome home."

"Hello," said Michael. "I was coming to see you this afternoon. I was trying to decide what would be the proper time to make a call in Terrytown."

She laughed. "I've told everybody you were coming. You'll have to resign yourself to being lionized. We don't get many celebrities."

"I can remember," said Michael, "when Terrytown didn't consider me a celebrity."

Nancianna stopped smiling. When she was grave, Michael thought, she was rather terribly grave. "Mother has planned a tremendous affair for you. Dinner and a dance afterward—all the trimmings. Mother," said Nancianna, "does things in a big way."

Michael, who had felt his mouth tighten at the mention of Nancianna's mother, found himself smiling instead.

"Undoubtedly I shall be tremendously sought after, since I knew you when!" said Nancianna. "What made you come back, Michael?"

"Oh, things," said Michael.

It wasn't the right answer. He had come to Terrytown because of Nancianna—because three months ago

She had sent him the clipping from the Terrytown paper—"Terrytown Boy Wins Nobel Prize"—and had written him a note. "Anna Jonna and I are coming to New York next week to do some shopping. If you're not too busy, we might say hello to each other."

He had been very shy of the new, dreamy, lovely young sophisticate who was Nancianna grown-up. "Tell me about you," she said eagerly.

"There isn't anything to tell," he answered.

Instantly he was sorry. Because Nancianna said, "Oh!" and talked of things that didn't matter. But later she tried again. "Why did you stay away so long, Michael?" "When are you coming home?"

"To Terrytown, you mean?" asked Michael. "Never, I hope."

Why had he said that? He had closed the door again.

Nancianna said, startled, "No, I suppose [illegible]"

But Nancianna had a month in New York [illegible] forgotten. [illegible] And "Big Jonna" Nancianna kept [illegible] the conversation back to Terrytown. She kept on saying, "Remember, Michael?" He sat on his porch and looked at and [illegible] knew that she had to pluck his heart and taken the place of ten-year-old Nancianna who had been with him so long.

She was playing off her [illegible] breaking goods. And then he saw the ring. Important looking.

"Mike—"

"Yes." "You should have come home sooner."

"Do me a favor?"

"Of course." "Yes, I should have come sooner."

It was then she said, "I'd like you to break my heart."

It was good that bit of flippery about the excuses came [illegible] then. It steadied him so that he was able to go on quite coolly.

"A broken heart, Nancianna, with a ring like that?"

"Because of the ring," she said. "He had been a fool to come back." "You'll have to draw me a map, Nancianna. You forget I'm very much out of the [illegible]

Protecting the Atlantic Lanes

BY FLIGHT LIEUTENANT E. B. REID
R.A.F. Public Relations Officer (Overseas)

[illegible]

I HAD arranged to go with one of the Sunderland crews on a submarine sweep. I was awakened at 12:30 a.m. in my room in an old Northern Ireland castle. A half hour later the crews assembled in the mess. Porridge, bacon and one egg and coffee for breakfast, with stacks of toast and marmalade and jam. The diet of aircrew is carefully worked out. They get eggs when nobody else does. Nobody begrudges it to them. Theirs is a job that requires the maximum in physical and mental alertness.

She looks like a real stooge trip this time, one of the boys remarks, but almost seven hundred miles out! They'd better have those old petrol tanks pretty full or there will be a lot of us bobbing around on the Atlantic waiting for the air sea rescue boys to pick us up.

A "stooge" trip the boys call it. But they are not all stooges. For instance only a couple of weeks before a kite piloted by F/Sgt. Bob Long of Alderson, Ont., had fought off three determined attacks by a Ju 88. And it was no very long ago that another aircraft of which P/O Ian Millar of Vancouver was skipper had force-landed in the sea due to engine trouble. The crew had spent an uncomfortable hour in heavy seas before the big Sunderland bouncing like a bucking bronco from wave top to wave top and finally became air borne again.

There's nothing to indicate that these couple of dozen men, most of them very young, are anything but very calm. Nerves will be starting off in a short time on a flight that will carry them halfway to Canada.

Very soon we assemble in the briefing room. The clouds have gone and the sky is a mass of stars. A strong wind has picked up during the night. That means headwinds on the way out. In the briefing room we get the word, that is the instructions, on the trip ahead. On one complete side of the room is a huge map of the Atlantic. Ribbons run from British ports to spots in the ocean marked by code letters. These are the convoys inbound from America. Out beyond 25 degrees west is a mandate: submarine.

I asks where you're going. The operations officer who wears the ribbons and wings of the last war tells the crew. American patrolling that area yesterday came on a pack of U-boats. Maybe an attack but we don't know what the result were. As you can see from the chart there's a convoy on the outside. Your job is these sub patrolers. You'll get your weather conditions from the met man.

Before the met man is far from hand. Once the engines of the aircraft he directs permits of the crew starting out. The stars over-head are purely a local condition. Information from the Atlantic is so vague that he can't predict with accuracy. There are several fronts, he knows that but the movement of these fronts is indefinite.

If you're lucky you may run into ideal conditions just as [illegible] the boys [illegible] I don't know. I mean get back. I can't predict it accurately.

Not Much Future in This

It doesn't look like there's much future in this, reminds W/O Harry Parliament of Calgary, the navigator. Parliament is a tall, [illegible] lanky lad with a little under three hundred to the other members of the crew. He has the reputation of being one of the most accurate navigators in the squadron. Handy is J for Johnny or Pipsqueak II as the boys prefer to call their Sunderland off course.

The crews tramp from the briefing room. Parliament is loaded down with maps and charts. P/O George Bailey of Whitby, the second pilot carries two little orange metal boxes. In these are Gertie and George, the homing pigeons which will be released if we are forced down at sea. At the docks the motor-boats are waiting to take us out to the Sunderlands moored far out. There the rest of the crew will be waiting. They are: P/O Art Mountford of Garnet Street, Regina, the wireless air gunner; Sgt. Jack Kelly, of Revelstoke, B.C., the rear gunner; Sgt. Harold Hutchison of Arlington Street, Winnipeg, the fitter and Sgt. Philip Marshall of Oakville, Ont., the flight engineer. All are tousle headed, sleep-eyed. They had come out to the aircraft the previous evening and had been sleeping aboard.

Mountford, who tends the skipper, he's soon got to get time off for a haircut or else buy a razor is busy making tea in the aircraft's tiny galley.

There is still some time until takeoff. We sit around the table in the wardroom chatting. These Sunderlands are roomy aircraft, almost airborne yachts. The skipper, big Jack Sumner, who is better than six feet tall and who used to be an instructor back in Canada, recalls the time when a station commander, wishing to go all out at his first wings parade, instructed one of his staff, who he knew had been in theatre business, to arrange an entertainment for a very select group of guests. What the station commander did not know was that the man he selected had specialized in coin life, in the fan dance type of entertainment.

Kelly and Marshall are debating the atomic as opposed to the molecular theory.

Hutchinson starts a real debate when he asks: "If you had the pukka gen (the real information) that the war was going to open up wide tomorrow and that we'd all be heading for France for another front and at the same time you had a chance to return to Canada what would you do?"

The consensus is that practically all would stay and see it through.

Sumner looks at his watch. He heaves himself to his feet. "Alright fellows, cigarettes and the oil heater out," he instructs.

Take-Off Time

It's take off time and while it is all right to smoke once the aircraft is airborne there's no smoking when the engines are being started up and gasoline fumes are likely to be seeping around.

I follow Sumner, Hodey and Parliament to the bridge. Sumner and Hodey climb into the pilot's and co-pilot's seats. Soon they roar into powerful full voice. We taxi out to the flare-path a row of lights bobbing on the water, preceded by the dinghy showing us the way with a flashing Aldis lamp. It is still very black night. The stars by this time have disappeared.

The engines roar again. We're speeding down the lake. The pilot pulls the control column back towards his stomach. We bounce once, twice and then we're airborne and heading out towards the open sea.

Nothing can happen until dawn. I go down to the wardroom to sleep. When I awake we're heading back towards base. The weather has closed down and we have been recalled.

I thought that'd be duff. F/L Sumner commentates.

Back at base beyond that trip has been abortive we learn that we are still top sleep for duty. We go to bed and sleep until noon. That night we learn we are to take off again early in the morning. The batman wakes us at 3:30. We report for briefing in time for a 5:30 takeoff. This time it's a convoy patrol. Again the operations officer refers to the map on the wall. He points to the location of the convoy. He shows us again the [illegible] submarine.

There's a definite sub pack out there, he says as he points to a spot in the convoy area. "The convoy escort shuns attacked from underneath and defenders seek out. Two ships above received another two. But the latest advices are that the convoy is still being trailed."

Circling the Convoy

Our job is to cover the convoy for a matter of about five hours. [illegible] Agreed. We go into the takeoff routine. Soon after the first light we are out in the area where we are to pick up the convoy. P/O Mountford is glued to the wireless receiving set. Parliament is busy checking over his navigation. Sumner and Hodey are at the controls turning right and left for the first sight of the ships. Kelly is back in the mid turret, swinging its streamlined glass shape round and round, the four machine guns pointing towards the sky.

From the navigation hatch where I am standing he looks like some creature from a Buck Rogers space ship episode. Mountford passes a message to the skipper through the inter-com. He has got a bearing on the convoy. The skipper swings to starboard and sets his course again over the trackless ocean.

Somebody nudges me and points forward and I see there about five miles ahead, spread out in several single lines, are the ships we have crossed so many times in lots of ocean to meet. Parliament's navigation has been faultless.

The skipper swings to port and starts circling at long range.

We won't go in close until recognition has been cleared established. Hodey says. These boats carry quite a sting and you're not going to have much future if they mistake you for an enemy.

Mountford picks up a message from the convoy's escorting warships. They have recognized us, okay and have a little information.

Submarine to Starboard

"We have a bearing on a submarine to starboard," a destroyer captain tells us. So apparently this is no false alarm. Maybe we'll be able to see the splashes as the depth charges, carried back [illegible] the stern, drop over the German U-boat. The crew [illegible] is known to be in the vicinity quickens everybody's interest. Perhaps we won't be able to attack but at least we will have the satisfaction of keeping the submarine under water for most of the daylight hours of the short mid December day.

Then begins an endless circling of the convoy, round and round we go like the music. Hutchinson goes into the galley and cooks lunch. Thick tough one steaks, potatoes and turnips with bread and jam for dessert. For tea we will have fried egg sandwiches.

The crew eat in turn four at a time. Sumner doesn't do any lingering over his meal. In an action area he wants to be up in the pilots seat. More time passes. It's beginning to get monotonous. The Sunderland is cold and I have neither flying boots nor flying pants. I wish the patrol would end as I stand around the oil stove in the galley trying to keep warm.

Then like a blast out of an inferno the alarm siren shrieks. Red warning lights flash on.

The skipper's spotted something. Hutchinson shouts as he heads towards the bomb racks. Simultaneously the skipper goes into a tight bank. We're flying at only about 250 feet so we have to use only about 200 feet altitude for if we are going to attack it will be from a very low level. Hutchinson and an English lad second wireless operator are poising down the side flaps in the bomb bay. They press the buttons that send the depth charges and bombs out on a track to their place on the lower surface of the wing. I dash up the stairs to the top deck and take up my position behind Sumner and Hodey. I can't see a thing until Hodey points off towards the horizon. Then I see something long and black. We're heading towards it at full throttle and full boost.

Crash Dive by Sub

The submarine appears to be at least five miles off, but distances are deceptive over the water.

Has the submarine seen us? Doubtful, the question. In a matter of a post of [illegible] the question is answered. One moment the submarine is there. The next it is gone in a crash dive.

He must have seen us almost as soon as we saw him. Sumner says, and his language isn't as pure as that.

Disappointed, we sweep on, the faces of all the crew. I feel an anti-climatic all-gone sensation.

We circle the area where the sub had been but an attempt to attack would be the wildest stab in the dark. The submarine might have beetled off in any one of many directions. We were too late.

Okay, bring in the bombs, the skipper instructs over the inter-com. Down below they roll in again on their track.

The circling commences again. We're nearing the end of our patrol.

Soon Sumner signals to one of the escorting destroyers. Our patrol is finished.

French Refugees Cross Pyrenees

By PERTINAX
(Copyright 1943, by North American Newspaper Alliance)

NEW YORK.—Some 20,000 refugees from France have managed to escape into Spain in less than five months, counted from November 11 when the Germans overran the so-called "free zone" which they had allocated to Vichy in June, 1940. The exodus has worked up at an average of about 1,000 persons a week.

Yet the Pyrenees Mountains do not extend far more than 240 miles from Cape Cerbere on the Mediterranean Sea to the Bay of Biscay. And between the two extremities of the range where the principal roads and the only railways run between France and Spain there are not more than two passes practicable for carriages. It would seem then that the cordon of German troops and police drawn around those well defined areas of transit ought to have easily closed all the gates.

But, apparently, the German guards were not numerous or expert enough to keep watch on the maze of valleys developing in the most various directions, wherefrom difficult tracks known to guides and shepherds can be followed on foot. Most of the refugees are of French birth. However they are interspersed with foreigners who never doubted what it would mean to them to fall into the clutches of the Gestapo.

The initial impulse of the Spanish Government was to compel the human flood to turn back. Had not many of these men and women set out from travel without the faintest pretense of a regular passport or visa? And indeed they would not have been spared being hurled again into the Nazi hell but for the intervention of the American and British ambassadors Dr. Carlton Hayes and Sir Samuel Hoare.

Problem of Refugees

Today these refugees are safe. They are allowed to proceed to North Africa under the aegis of a Portuguese port. But, said, that result was at the end of protracted negotiations. The problem is by no means disposed of. Perhaps it is a never ending problem since the good reception of the Nazis and of Pierre Laval will keep on [illegible] come those who regard themselves as singled out for reprisals.

Additional fugitives continue to come down the Pyrenean slopes and from time to time Spanish authorities are prone to make them retrace their steps under escort. General Francisco de Jordana, the Foreign Minister of General Franco in Madrid has shown himself responsive to humane considerations but his promises to the two ambassadors are not always sure to curb the [illegible] of the Minister of the Interior.

Nevertheless a large number of French men who fled to the Pyrenees rather than to the Alps make the right choice. The Alps, in spite of the many passes that lead across the mountain chain, at most have long [illegible] proved to be a [illegible] trap. Swiss official [illegible] country within the grasp of the German power. Laval [illegible] a signature [illegible] regiment of [illegible] by [illegible] which, fortunately, is not [illegible] in the south.

Sir Samuel Hoare and Dr. Hayes have not been confined with rescuing the refugees from Vichy. They are providing them with supplies and money. In fact under their control an organization is being set up which deserves to be paralleled with Red Cross achievements. They very naturally have asked General Henri Giraud's administration to lend help and some African port food ships have already been shipped.

General Giraud will receive the victims of Nazi tyranny. But he is said to have made it a condition that beforehand spies should be carefully combed out. Spies concealing themselves in the human flotsam are reported already to have found their way into North Africa and that all sorts of precautions should be prescribed. When French lives are at stake conditions should not be laid down. And the word "conditions" was not used properly.

Predict Nazi Rout Soon in Tunisia

[illegible]

WASHINGTON.—Now that the battle line for the final struggle is formed with the United States troops in their assigned place how long will it take to rout the Axis out of Tunisia? We know that the experts attached to the map in the military hall of honor, the operations room of the War Department as they read the latest secret bulletins from Overseas, [illegible] not give [illegible] that precision.

I have never forgot that a [illegible] phase of setback must be expected in war. But and [illegible] more even than [illegible] the past [illegible] months that we should [illegible] Axis out before July 1. Well and see then as [illegible] they said confidently [illegible] people were asking what had become of General Patton. Second Corps after it ceased to appear on the battle maps.

Then we wanted and saw and the Germans saw.

The Second Corps had been [illegible] Patton. It had had many [illegible]. Rest, reorganization, refitting and replacement of losses of men and materiel which were essential would normally require a week or ten days back of the zone of fire.

With amazing speed and [illegible] teamwork in movement the Second Corps [illegible] back into the battle line to [illegible] into position replacing a British [illegible] which had been in the fight before the Germans [illegible] hardly found the American [illegible] men and guns were driving home a most [illegible] attack.

If the Second Corps could [illegible] time day after day the guns about 90 per cent [illegible] made on the first day. It would be in Tunis by the middle of the week. For very good reasons this would be nothing less than a military miracle.

Opposed by Nazi Veterans

We are now against General von Arnim's picked veterans the pick of the German Army, whom he has been training and assembling into units for siege defence. It was from them that we have taken chosen natural position which he has fortified.

In the battle for heights in the [illegible] most of the highest. From their crest we generally look down upon those held by the Germans. The aim of German strategy is to make us pay a huge initial price for outpost [illegible] before we come to the assault of the main defence line which inevitably had to be shortened.

At present the front of ninety miles is too long for intact siege defence by the total of Axis combat forces which number about 100,000 out of the total of 180,000 counting all personnel the Axis has in Tunisia.

How long the Axis can hold out depends upon three main factors. One is the extent of the replacements and material received. Another is just how well the final defence line is fortified as a whole to prevent critical break throughs. A third is how far German [illegible] hold up in what is bound to be a losing fight.

A rout before June 1 does seem an even bet if we keep on hammering and cutting off Axis transport by sea and air.

The Doe Who Was One-Eyed

A fable of Æsop [illegible] band of [illegible] to graze [illegible] the edge of a cliff as she [illegible] to secure greater safety. She turned her eye towards the land that she might perceive the approach of a hunter or hound and her injured eye towards the sea from which she entertained no anticipation of danger. Some boatmen sailing by saw her and taking a successful aim mortally wounded her. Said she: "O wretched creature that I am! to take such precaution against the land and after all to find this seashore to which I had come for safety so much more perilous."

Danger sometimes comes from a source that is least so perceived.

ders. Forget something?" asked Nancianna equably.

Remembered something, said Michael briefly. "Nancianna, what? Why did you write that note? Why did you run away? Why did you?"

"You're so shy, Michael. If I had stayed in New York for a million years you would never have kissed me. I had to get you back here somehow. There was something between us, the Terrytown that you remembered. And until you and that ghost, we'd just didn't have a chance."

She was so close. "And Clarissa?" asked Michael.

"You waited so long before you came, three months, Michael. And I knew it was make-shift for Clarissa. You see that was never American. Good boy, Alasdair."

She was crying. He couldn't see but her tears were wet against his cheek. "Nancianna, how did you know I'm shy?"

Instead of answering Nancianna [illegible] "We've been [illegible] each other ever since I was 12 years old and you ask me that. I know you are shy."

Eyewitness of Raid on Tokio

BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT
(Copyright, 1943, by The New York Times)

[illegible]

I [illegible] corps in Tokio that the worst has happened to all the eight members of Major Gen. James H. Doolittle's squadron who crashed in Japanese-Occupied China after bombing Japan on April 18, 1942. The War Department has revealed that two of the planes landed in enemy territory.

This revelation of the probable fate of the flyers was made by Ramon Muni Lavalle, former commercial attache of the Argentine Embassy in Tokio who was the last known Latin-American to leave Japan. He was able to get out of the country on January 19 only because his Government threatened reprisals on the Japanese diplomats in Argentina.

Since he arrived in the country on April 2 Senor Lavalle has been in consultation with the War, Navy and State Departments giving them what information he gathered during his five-month stay after war was declared.

The story that Senor Lavalle has to tell is one of almost unbelievable barbarity. For he served in Hokkaido four months after the Japanese invaded and occupied the island. He was [illegible] of Japanese soldiers bayoneting wounded and [illegible] British soldiers in their beds in the Stanley Hospital, and he himself saw British women have their hands tied behind them and bent taped on the street and then [illegible].

Saw Doolittle's Raid

Senor Lavalle's story of [illegible] in Tokio [illegible] April [illegible] January 9, 1943 confirms the fears of Japanese inhuman cruelty to Doolittle's men. He [illegible] saw whole men beaten on the streets of Tokio but was himself compelled to carry a revolver at all times. He is one of the few foreigners who saw the Doolittle raid. Even on the day after he arrived in Tokio he was startled to hear three long air raid alarms.

It was Saturday noon. He retired. "I was working in the embassy. When I heard the alarm I ran to an roof. I saw several General Doolittle planes flying over the roof-tops. I can't say I have been more than 100 feet off the ground."

I looked down the streets. An Tokio seemed to be in panic. Japs were running everywhere, pushing, shoving, screaming. Every area in and land shelter in the city. Little children and [illegible] Japanese bodies have no [illegible] of bravery. I could see little starting near the port.

One [illegible] Japanese interpreters in the embassy were [illegible] out of their [illegible]. I [illegible] down to get them, but they wouldn't come up to the roof. After the raid a Japanese scrub-woman who worked for us came up to me and said: "If these [illegible] were a [illegible] raid."

That raid by Doolittle was one of the greatest psychological shocks ever said. It caught the Japanese unprepared. Their unbounded confidence began to crack.

The day after the raid [illegible] Tokio [illegible] papers said [illegible] American planes had been [illegible] dropped. I didn't even see any American planes over Tokio. The [illegible] knew said, a statement [illegible] the Japanese anti-aircraft [illegible] was [illegible] I know for a fact that the anti-aircraft drive was removed.

The results of Doolittle's raid are still evident in Japan. They are stamped into the days in the habits of the Japanese people. When before they, [illegible] themselves and from aerial attacks, they took refuge in the [illegible] cellars, morning and each night.

Japanese newspapers carry [illegible] Americans [illegible] by these planes are [illegible] in Texas or [illegible] bomb [illegible] Fire brigades have been [illegible] Fire drills are practiced. Food [illegible] are [illegible] to feed "A Hundred-Year War"

Despite this, however, the Japanese people [illegible] their morale is [illegible] average citizen [illegible] to doubt the accuracy of the information [illegible] they [illegible] a hundred-year war.

Radio [illegible] broadcasts [illegible] that [illegible] are pasted up in all [illegible] rooms. Everywhere people [illegible] they are told about the hundred year war.

Under these circumstances it makes very little difference to the average Japanese when he dies. He knows the war will go on and on for generations. Take the Chinese war, for example. The Japanese won't even discuss it among themselves. When they do, they refer guardedly to it as the long incident.

Senor Lavalle, a former newspaper man, and a keen observer had some difficulty getting out of Japan. He knew too much of what had happened in Hong Kong, too much of what was [illegible] in Tokio.

Where the Lilies Blow

By Robert Connell

STRICTLY speaking we have only a single true lily on Vancouver Island: Lilium columbianum (to give it what appears to be its best established botanical name), the Columbia lily. It takes its descriptive name from the [illegible] banks it was first found in the Oregon days of the Hudson's Bay Company. Its reflexed waxy flowers of clear orange yellow quickly spotted are among the chief of our Summer beauties. They appear in the thicketed corners of old snake fences and [illegible] the narrow strips of alluvial land along the Summer water courses of our smaller streams, as well as in open woods and broad grassy places generally. Crossing Mount Valentine on July 1 1916 our little party came on the finest display of this lily I have ever seen. Growing in a [illegible] swale where all was dewy moist but not wet the lily plants were so much taller and the flowers so much larger than in our Gulf I thought I had come on a new species. This lily is often called the wood tiger lily, and the true tiger lily has after-[illegible] curves instead of the [illegible] ones the Columbian has [illegible] more like the old fashioned martagon or Turk's cap lilies and might properly be called Turk's cap lily.

But if we have but one species of the lily genus we have a number of plants of the lily family, and of which with a wide range of difference agree in having flowers where floral envelope is divided above into six usually [illegible] Instead of calling the same three the corolla and the outer the calyx it is [illegible] to take the six together [illegible] of perianth. Some times the segments of the perianth are united below and separate above to form a tubular flower. Always the ovary or seed box is above the base of the perianth and not below it as in the daffodil and the snowdrop, [illegible] the amaryllis family or in the narcissus family.

To belabor this somewhat technical discourse I give some amusing lines I have just come across and which are attributed to the late Dr Wainham How at one time Bishop of Wakefield:

"See grandpapa my flower she cried
I found it on the grass
A lady in a carriage spied the rare
Surveyed it through her glass.

"Ah yes" he said "it is delicate
And all the flowers bigulate
Or the gamopetalous
Composite exogenous
A truly specimen it is Tetraxacum dens leonis"

She took the blossom back again
His face her wistful eye on
"I thought" she said, with quivering lip
It was a dandelion!"

Lilies of Spring

First and foremost of the lily family when the weather takes on its warmer guise is the white fawn lily. The dainty beauty of its flowers is set off by the glossy [illegible] pair of leaves with their markings of copper, brown on green. Usually single-stemmed the fawn lily under unusually favorable conditions may bear two or more flowers on a single stem. Just as some plants have almost unmottled green leaves so the flowers vary in [illegible] shades. All have bright [illegible] anthers or bases to the creamy white floral segments but [illegible] with additional markings in warm purplish brown.

Some of the finest of the white fawn lilies are found in the Sooke Hills growing in the rough stony areas from cliffs. But in that western region we approach the nearest confines of the less well-known pink fawn lily. This beautiful flower with its clear rose pink blossoms is probably more widely spread on Vancouver Island than the white but owing to the sparser population [illegible] about its haunts it is not [illegible] known. Even recent and official publications as Abrams Illustrated Flora of the Pacific States know nothing of its presence. Neither does Piper's Flora of Washington although common on that state's western coast. Macoun says it has not lately been collected. Like so many others of our plants we owe the first record of the pink fawn lily to Menzies who found it on Nootka Sound a century and a half ago. From his specimen still preserved at Kew the plant was described and named Erythronium revolutum. Unfortunately in Abrams book this title has been appropriated quite wrongly by the white fawn lily of our Island though it is accompanied by a drawing only describable as a libel on any species of Erythronium I ever saw. Henry's Flora of Southern British Columbia puts the pink-flowered as a variety of the white, calling it E. grandiflorum var. Smithii.

The pink fawn lily first appears at this end of the Island about four miles beyond Sooke on the north side of the Jordan River Road and a mile or so back from the sea. The white species meets it and you may pass at a step from the ground of one species to that of the other. Records show that it occurs up the coast at the entrance to Barkley Sound and so on to Nootka. On the other side of the Island it is recorded by F. Dominy as appearing along the Cowichan River in place. I first saw it at Campbell River one Sunday, Monday 12 April 1937 in the little room where I was [illegible] at Dayton service. On the table by which I stood when preaching was a bouquet of these rosy flowers and it seemed to me that I had never seen anything so beautiful. A few days later I was given some from the Indian Reserve between Quathiaski Cove and Cape Mudge. They are found also I understand at Kingcome Inlet and at Hardy north of Quatsino Sound. So that as I said before the pink fawn lily's range has the wider range on our coast and the adjoining islands and Mainland coast to the north.

There is a third species of the plant found rather rarely on the Island. This is E. [illegible] the yellow fawn lily. I have [illegible] that was in the grounds of the late Belvedere House at Sooke. Two plants were growing at the time at the head of a large Douglas fir. It has [illegible] been found on Mount Prevost near Duncan and is common enough in the Cowichan. Whence no doubt the seed was brought here. It was once credited to Mount Washington on the border of the Forbidden Plateau region but this was an error. Mount Washington [illegible] the Mt. and Coal Range was the locality intended.

Wake Robin and Camass

Close on the heels of the fawn lilies come the trillium with their flowers of [illegible] the trillium for perianth, like the lilies of green calyx and colored corolla, each having three distinct segments. The leaves also are three in number and arranged in a whorl or what looks like a lily pad at the stem, a few inches below the single flower. Trillioms are to be [illegible] usually in shady woods where they may be seen among the ferns by the roadside. I first saw them in the Hudson's Bay Company's woods on the south side of the road from Cedar Hill village to Cadboro Bay and I remember very vividly my surprised delight at seeing them show white patly about the dark and sombre underwoods of the forest. Two years ago I found them in hundreds among the alluvial flat of Langford Creek above the [illegible]. The rabbit had been at [illegible] and the ground was thickly crowded with the dark green leaves [illegible] flowers [illegible] They [illegible] to be very abundant about Goldstream [illegible] years and are yet to be found a plenty on the more secluded part of the river valley.

The American name for the trillium is wake robin, which very well describes its relation to Springtime and the robin. Better in the East than here, where robins are with us all Winter. Reviers of John Burroughs will recall that one of his delightful books is about birds around Wake Robin because as he says in the preface [illegible] the common name of the white trillium which blooms in all our woods and which marks the arrival of the birds. And on the first page of the first chapter he continues:

"The dandelion tells me when to look for the swallow, the dog-tooth violet when to expect the wood thrush and when I have found the wake robin in bloom I know the season is fairly inaugurated. [illegible] With me this flower is associated not merely with the awakening of birds but I do not have aware [illegible] but with the universal awakening and reliable [illegible] of Nature."

Close behind the trillium comes the first of our two species of camass. The plant [illegible] of the Rocky Mountains. On the coast of plains and prairies as well as on the smaller prairies that on the coast have been able to [illegible] the encroachments of the forest the camass was a Indian days and down into the beginnings of the trading order an economic point of the first order. To people living largely on fish and [illegible] the bulbs were [illegible] and sago to the people of other lands. And the camass gave a large enough supply to provide for pit cooking and for the [illegible]. Cooked in pits by placing [illegible] in the end the bulbs are used by those of our race who have learned from many times to have been agreeably flavored and tasty.

The grassy places and woods dotted over with white, blue, [illegible] in exhilarating [illegible] with their dainty [illegible] and [illegible] harvest bed with its [illegible] and greater.

The first species of camass to bloom is distinguished by its [illegible] smaller [illegible] parts by the peculiar manner [illegible] segments [illegible] by itself and in withering each segment rises up separately. The other species called [illegible] keeps the segments [illegible] arranged [illegible] the [illegible] of the flowering period they all together and [illegible] the end [illegible] [illegible] the Goldstream valley. Its bulbs are [illegible] bands of small creamy white flowers rise above the large [illegible] leaves arranged a [illegible] on the main stem. It is [illegible] and a sweet scent.

Another species I look for every year on a visit to Oak Bay Avenue where in spite of what the botanical writers say, it is so far from [illegible] and stream banks [illegible] a rocky outcrop [illegible] Mt. [illegible] because [illegible] flower heads are much smaller and [illegible] but the [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] also known as Nuttall's Sagittaria Co.

Prominent [illegible] are the [illegible] have distinctly heart-shaped flowers [illegible] in the forests of the West Coast and on May 25 1938 while a small party of us followed the trail to Boulder Creek we found in the commonest flowering patch on that [illegible] facing Hurricane with its huge trees. The other species known as Oregon fawn lily, D. oregonum, was in flower in the Pemberton Woods on May 9 1949. It is a handsomer plant than the other or at least the flowers are prettier, more distinctly bell-shaped.

The greater twisted stalk, Streptopus amplexifolius, has also [illegible] white and with their segments [illegible] strongly turned back. It is common [illegible]

I have left to the last what I [illegible] the most charming [illegible] of these plants of the [illegible] and the group to which the lilies belong. It is the little [illegible] known as wood [illegible] of the valley. Unfortunately in many places where it covers the ground it does not always bloom, probably from too much shade. In favorable beds it is really lovely and in addition possesses a very sweet perfume. Its botanical name is Maianthemum bifolium variety Kamtschaticum. It is scarcely if at all different from the British Maianthemum convallaria of Hooker, of which the French is clearly the [illegible] of the valley mayflower. It is so local however over there that it was not until it was found abundant at Harkness [illegible] Scarborough, where its native character was evident that it was duly recognized among the British flora.

DEAR DAD: We are having a so-called pause in action. So perhaps I can do a little corresponding — something badly neglected in the last few weeks. Yesterday we received quite a batch of mail and a whole bunch of your letters came together. Mail usually comes in batches.

[illegible] want to know what be comes of some of your mail have been [illegible]. I have [illegible] I S Mail [illegible] Canal [illegible] I saw [illegible] had not the corners of mailbags to make [illegible] to stick their [illegible] through. When [illegible] read books about these sheiks [illegible] they are [illegible] wrong. [illegible] I doubt think they ever [illegible] a bath, with the perfumes of Arabia [illegible] I am [illegible] for [illegible] I [illegible] Dad [illegible] for the [illegible] of [illegible] For the [illegible] that matter we aren't smelling any too good ourselves. I luxuriated yesterday — washed my face, shaved, took a bath and washed my clothes, all in three-quarters of a basinful of water.

It has been cold clammy cold in these hills and mountains. Whoever thinks Africa is all desert and sand better get their geographies out and look it up again. They laughed at me when I brought a fur-lined jacket and fur-lined gloves. I've been doing the laughing for the last several [illegible] for breakfast today. They were mighty good, if you could get them hot. But nine out of ten are stone cold by the time you get your fork into them or pick them up in your fingers as the case may be.

We are in the woods. But we can't make any fires. At night the light would give us away in daytime the smoke. So we devised a sort of big can that we dig down into the ground. We can completely conceal any heat it gives off. So we can have a little heat that way at night.

It is a queer feeling to be out here in some God-forsaken spot aiming your big guns at some point away over a distant range. Our eyes are away out there ahead of us [illegible] the [illegible] be able to see pretty accurately [illegible] every now and then we see a big cloud of [illegible] soon after we hear the [illegible].

The Jerries made us [illegible] here [illegible] and [illegible] a big shell was expected to land close to us for comfort. In the last scrap we [illegible] we were out the story went the rounds of a [illegible] shell flying [illegible]. As the gunner pulled the lanyard he [illegible] shouted "Ready Aloud! [illegible] shell [illegible] [illegible].

In one of the [illegible] there was a [illegible] [illegible] there in the world [illegible] Jerries [illegible] was [illegible] we were [illegible] he was [illegible] about never getting to rest. When we were resting he was [illegible] complaining. How in the hell are we ever going to win this war and get back home sitting here on our rear ends?

When he was up front he could see no sense in killing men who never did anything to him. When he was back behind he was [illegible] that the only way to win the war was to slaughter them all like the meat packers kill hogs. As a result he wasn't much of a fighter until he got in a corner with four Jerries coming at him. He had to shoot them all to get out. He did. Now he wants to do everything but shoot Jerries. If he is AWOL it will be because he is out ahead of the [illegible] to find some more to slaughter.

Last night we were standing around [illegible] the fire a lot of us. This was the time of year [illegible] How to prepare [illegible] so a [illegible] matter [illegible] how to patch holes in the seat of the pants, how to sew on a button with [illegible] and how to wash clothes in salted [illegible] water. The old [illegible] circles have nothing on us.

By the way, that little silver bear I bought in Yellowstone Park with your money. I lost it. I'm so glad you found your Phi Beta Kappa key. I'll never find [illegible] bear. It's undoubtedly buried in several miles of North African sand. It was which there is no mortgage. But it was in a good cause. I was out checking on some of our officers and men, who [illegible] were killed. Some [illegible] I learn that [illegible] I don't know which is worse.

We got orders to change our forms. A lot of us are not going to change for the best of all reasons. Jerry. So we are wearing [illegible] I wonder [illegible] the boys would do if we [illegible] we are fighting a [illegible] on a parade.

I'd like to tell you a lot of pretty fine things but I can't. For one thing my sergeant-major is not only doing his own work but assuming the type-[illegible] work as well. And that typewriter ain't what she used to be since the [illegible] and rain. Here as Bills blue hell.

Tells of Bombing Raid on Tokio

By GEORGE KENNEDY

[illegible]

WASHINGTON — From the time he took off from the U.S. aircraft carrier Hornet until he bailed out in the [illegible] tank factory, Captain Harold F. Watson, of West Hartford, Conn., one of the pilots on the Tokio raid, did not see any of the American planes.

Captain Watson, six feet one, 210 pounds blond wavy hair, is in quarters in his apartment here with a right arm which is recovering from burns tangled in the parachute shroud.

He had never been at sea before he left on the Hornet and one of his worries was that he might be a bit seasick, he said. He wasn't. Even on the exceptionally rough day on which they made their unexpected and premature takeoff he felt fine.

General Doolittle had told us about 600 miles from Japan was the maximum distance at which we could take off and still reach the designated landing fields in China, Captain Watson recalled. We took off 810 miles from Tokio and [illegible] to say that the men did not expect to get back.

Just after breakfast that morning we heard that a ship was being fired on. We went up on deck. I saw the ship on the horizon. One of our [illegible] was firing on it and sunk it, we heard later.

Immediately the word went around that we were going to take off. I was all in a quiver because the mechanics had the sparkplugs out of the motors. You see we had planned to take off in warm weather. As I was the No. 9 ship to go the mechanics doubled up and managed to get the plugs all back in time.

"Thumbs Up"

I passed my flight leader on the stairs and asked, "Any instructions, coach?" He said, "No."

The other pilots probably had more time to shake hands with a few friends made on the voyage but for the most part it was just the passing of a signal "thumbs up" or the good luck ring with the fingers.

General Doolittle was the first off and we were all naturally very anxious to see how that went. It was the first time a two-motored plane had taken off from a carrier on a mission of war. The handling crew sent him down the runway in time with the roll of the ship so that he got a lift as he went off the deck. The whole crew and all the [illegible] got a cheer when we saw him getting away all right. He crossed the ship once for compass bearings and then was off.

A very brisk wind was in our favor. It was about [illegible] miles an hour. The Hornet was probably making better than twenty knots, so each ship had a fifty-mile wind lift in addition to its own speed when it got to the end of the runway.

My turn came about 8.45 about twenty-five minutes after General Doolittle.

Marking Said 810 Miles

I revved her once, that is turned up the motors, but I had to let her slow down at the [illegible] of the naval officer in charge of the handling crew [illegible] with the [illegible] of the roll of the ship. I glanced at the board again with its compass reading and wind velocity markings then looked back at the officer and the man with [illegible] carrying a small blackboard. The marking on that was 810 miles.

I revved her again, and then we let go. We cleared the deck and we were in the air.

Captain Watson was sitting in their apartment high above Washington with his wife. They have not observed their second anniversary. Here he got the [illegible] notebook that's worn [illegible] paper has log from a national secretary. It showed that he and his crew were five hours aboard the whirling dervish. It [illegible] that Mitchell B-25 bomber, before [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible].

Nurses—Their Place in the Community

IN sickness and in health, at birth and at death, through the long hours of the night, in the tragedy of a serious illness, and in the happiness of a restoration to health, the graduate nurse is an ever-constant, [illegible] to the community, caring for the sick and safeguarding the health of the well.

Nursing service is something we rather take for-granted, like our city water supply or electric lights. If these services were stopped we would be perturbed; but as it is, we accept them; an ordinary, expected occurrence; and give little thought how they come about, or who is responsible for them. Let us tell you something of the activities of the graduate nurse in Greater Victoria.

Nursing is usually divided into three main groups: hospital, private duty and public health, although nurses work in other fields, too. The word nursing means "to nourish or nurture," and as nursing developed in the past eighty years the first emphasis was upon the care of the sick. But this concept of nursing became broadened, and now the function of the nurse is recognized as having a threefold aspect: the maintenance of health, the prevention of disease, and the care of the sick. All competent nurses embrace these three activities in her work, no matter in which field of nursing she may happen to be.

An eminent physician once said: "Three forces have united to place the science and art of medicine on its present footing—anesthesia, the training school for nurses, and bacteriology."

The training school for nurses has been responsible for the constant supply of skilled graduates, without whom the growth of the modern hospital would have been impossible. In the hospital the doctor knows that his patient will receive all the benefits that science can provide. He knows that during his absence his patient will be constantly under the supervision, and in the care of, trained personnel. The trained nurse forms the nucleus of the hospital, and about her has developed this modern institution with all its intricate manifestations. It is through the nurse that the various services of the hospital are co-ordinated: nursing care, the operating room, the laboratory, the X-ray, dietetic and social service departments. Much of the actual nursing care is done by student nurses, but this is only possible because of the presence of the graduate.

What Nurses Do

Last year in the two general hospitals of Victoria, St. Joseph's Hospital and the Royal Jubilee Hospital, graduate nurses assisted in the care of more than 10,000 patients. What do these nurses do? Nursing service in the hospital is the responsibility of the director of nursing and her assistants, both day and night. Directly responsible to the director for the administration of their respective floors are the ward supervisors, who oversee the actual care that is given to the patient. It is the supervisor's job to see that Mrs. Jones is comfortable and well cared for, that she is receiving the treatment, diet and medications as ordered by the doctor, that she is properly prepared for her operation, that the necessary routines with respect to laboratory tests are carried out, that her meals are attractively served and that she is content with them. Assisting the supervisor in these functions are graduate nurses serving as head nurses and general staff nurses. The supervisor is responsible also for much of the teaching of the student nurse after she leaves the classroom and is working regularly on the wards.

Graduate nurses, too, are found in special hospital departments: in the operating room, X-ray, social service, central supply room, where equipment and surgical supplies are maintained, in the solution room, where solutions which are to be given directly into the veins of patients must be carefully and meticulously prepared. In hospitals such as ours which have schools of training there must also be nurse instructors to teach the students.

The Private Duty Nurse

Historically, private duty is one of the oldest in the whole field of nursing, having been coincident in its earliest forms with family life. The private duty nurse gives skilled nursing care to one individual, either in the patient's own home or in the hospital. In Victoria there is a Nurses' Registry, in charge of a registered nurse and conducted by the Victoria Chapter of the Registered Nurses' Association of British Columbia. The services of a nurse may be secured through this agency. In the past six months 1,566 calls for nurses were received. The graduate nurse on call may be wakened in the middle of the night to attend an emergency ruptured appendix, or a serious automobile injury. She may be asked to travel with a patient Up-Island or over to the Mainland. In the household disrupted by the sudden illness of one of the members of the family she acts as confidante, friend and advisor. Calls for nurses come not from Victoria only; hospitals on the Island or in the interior make use of the registry to fill vacancies in their staffs.

Nurse Goes to Telegraph Creek

This Winter, in response to a request for volunteers, a nurse travelled to Telegraph Creek, B.C., where there was an epidemic amongst the Indians. Here is an account of some of the difficulties she had to surmount in getting there:

"We flew to Whitehorse via Prince George and Fort St. John, covering the 1,200-mile route in the one day. But it took me nearly two weeks to get to Telegraph Creek from there, a distance of about 250 miles via Carcross and Atlin. It was 40 degrees below when we got to Skagway, and by Saturday morning it was 68 degrees below. So I donned my woolies! I left for Carcross by train . . . a fire at each end of the coach kept us from actually freezing. We flew over mountainous country all the way to Telegraph Creek, after staying at Carcross a week and making two unsuccessful attempts to take off. The plane was a small freight plane, and we sat on mail sacks and freight. . . . I am boarding at the home of the Indian Agent. . . . The only means of travel during the Winter is by dog-sled, and I have made four trips to a neighboring Indian village. The nearest doctor is at Atlin, 150 miles north, but except by plane there is no way of contacting him unless by wire. . . . At present I have two home nursing groups and a first aid class meeting weekly. I don't believe they have ever been taught much in the way of health and sanitation, but they seem most anxious to learn, which is encouraging."

Not all nurses are called upon for such pioneer service as this, but whatever the call may be they are prepared and eager to meet it.

Public Health Nursing

The third major field of nursing activity is that of public health nursing. The earliest activities in the public health field was in so-called "policing"—in enforcing laws of sanitation, quarantine and isolation. In time this policing became automatic and contagion was in part controlled; but the vast field of non-infectious diseases, of child welfare, and the maintenance of general health began to be recognized. Advancement in these fields could only be accomplished by educating the general public. To bring necessary instruction to the common man a direct and individual agency was needed. This agency was the public health nurse.

In Greater Victoria a generalized programme of public health nursing is carried on by the Victorian Order of Nurses and by the nursing staff of the Saanich Health Department. The activities of these nurses are many and varied. Bedside nursing care in their own homes is given to patients whose incapacities range all the way from having a [illegible] these home visits the nurse utilizes the opportunities presented to instruct the family in home nursing, to teach the principles of healthy living, and to help the family to solve its health problems. Home visits of a purely educational nature are made to give instruction in pre- and post-natal care, infant and child welfare, and follow up work in tuberculosis and other communicable diseases. Immunization and well-baby clinics are conducted and classes in mother craft are given. Where problems of a psychological nature are encountered the case is referred to the Provincial Psychiatric Clinic.

School Nursing

In Saanich the nurses of the municipal department of health are also responsible for the school nursing. This function is carried on by full-time school nurses in other municipalities of the greater metropolitan area. The school nursing programme includes health instruction, health supervision, immunization, communicable disease control and the discovery of remedial defects in children with plans for their correction. Home visits are made to interest parents in the health needs of their children.

Public health nurses are also active in the municipal health office of Victoria and in the clinics for the control of venereal disease and tuberculosis. A very new development is that of industrial nursing, a field which should prove to be productive and worth while.

Changing Aspects of Streets

Everyone comments on the changing aspects of the streets of Victoria since the beginning of the war. This is particularly due to the influx of men with the army, air force and navy. Should these men fall sick or be injured, we find their care being superintended by graduate nurses. Nursing sisters serve in the Mount Tolmie Military Hospital, at Gordon Head, in the Royal Canadian Navy Hospital in Esquimalt, and at Patricia Bay.

Nurses not mentioned in any of the previous groups are those who assist physicians, surgeons and dentists in their consulting rooms.

Nurses Off Duty

The story would not be complete were we to omit the mention of some of the work done by nurses in their off-duty time, or by nurses who are no longer actively engaged in nursing. Since the beginning of the war more than 800 women in Victoria have received instruction from graduate nurses in the Red Cross home nursing classes. Heading the St. John home nursing courses and the St. John volunteer aid classes we find a graduate nurse. Nurses have given lectures to A.R.P. workers and have held classes in home nursing for school girls. Standing by in case of an emergency, there are nurses to staff positions in the A.R.P. setups and in hospitals. Much of the A.R.P. first aid equipment has been planned by nurses. Nurses are on call to travel Up-Island with the Red Cross Mobile Surgical Unit should it be required in an emergency. They have assisted with the Red Cross Blood Bank, and make surgical supplies for that organization. The overseas nursing sisters have supplied a first aid kit for the Sally Anne canteen.

Registered Nurses

As registered nurses these women of whom we have been speaking are members of a world-wide organization. The use of the letters R.N. signifies that the nurse has met the qualifications as laid down for the protection of the public by the laws of British Columbia, and that she is a member of the Registered Nurses' Association of British Columbia. The provincial association is divided into districts, which are in turn made up of chapters. The local organization is the Victoria Chapter, part of the larger Vancouver Island Districts. Through her provincial membership the registered nurse belongs to the Canadian Nurses' Association, and through this body she is represented on the International Council of Nurses. The headquarters of the I.C.N. have been, like many other similar agencies, forced to move. From their regular home in Geneva in 1937 they crossed the Channel to London. Then in 1939 they were moved to the United States. Canadian and American nurses have assumed the responsibility of preserving the integrity of this body until such time as it will again be a truly international organization. Through her individual efforts the nurse will help in reconstruction after the war, but her greatest and most effective contribution will be accomplished because she is working as part of an organized whole.

More Planes for the Southwest Pacific

By WARWICK FAIRFAX (Managing Director, The Sydney Morning Herald) (North American Newspaper Alliance)

Warwick Fairfax, managing director of The Sydney Morning Herald, discusses the situation in the Southwest Pacific, wherein he states that a lucky break for the Japanese on a slight slip on our part might have the greatest consequences.

SYDNEY, Australia.—It is not at all surprising that the question should be asked bluntly in America why, after so many successes in the Southwest Pacific, General Douglas MacArthur and the Australian Government are still stressing the danger of their position and asking for more help.

The answer is very simple. First, in spite of all successes, Japanese sea, land and air forces in this area or contiguous to it are at least as great as ever. Secondly, allowing for wastage and losses through all causes and allowing for the difficulty and time needed for replacing reserves from America, the Allied air strength is barely adequate for the task.

It has made itself adequate by going all out all the time and by scraping up every available machine for an emergency such as the Bismarck Sea battle. That was an effort comparable to the first British 1,000-plane raid on Germany, which could not have been repeated in a few days' time.

A lucky break for the Japanese or a slight slip on our own part might have the gravest consequences. The string of successes are not sweeping the enemy away, except locally and tactically. From a strategic point of view they are merely repelling his attacks and it is not much use having repelled nineteen attacks if the twentieth should succeed. Air is the key to the position and our margin of safety is definitely inadequate.

The General Picture

The general picture is as follows: Truk, which is the Japanese Pearl Harbor, is but 800 miles from Kavieng in New Britain. At Truk is stationed a powerful, well-balanced battle fleet ready for instant use. In the ring of islands immediately behind the Japanese front lines is stationed a large army of well-trained, battle-hardened troops. Any slight let-up in the present Allied air superiority would enable all this force to surge forward. On the sea we are designed to the unlikelihood of any strong Allied forces penetrating west of the Solomons to check enemy shipping, of which there is still no shortage. On land, a major part of our battle-hardened troops consist of but Australian Sixth, Seventh and Ninth Divisions and some militia units and those American units which have been operating in New Guinea. On this score the Japanese have advantage over us.

There are, admittedly, plenty of Allied troops in the whole area, but the African campaign proves that battles are not won just by numbers. For reasons of security it is impossible in a press message to give details of the losses in men and materiel from all causes incurred in this area. The total of Allied combat losses are not given and, in any case, air war is not fought in so wild and undeveloped a part of the earth without losses from many other causes than combat.

Not Fought Without Damage

It is not fought without damage being done to Allied fuel dumps and other precious ground installations which may be 2,000 miles from Brisbane, the nearest large city. No troops can fight for long in New Guinea, especially on the coast, without a partial loss of physical efficiency through malaria, tropical skin diseases or general loss of condition.

All these problems are incomparably easier for the enemy, who is closer to his bases and civilized centres.

Prime Minister John Curtin's statement of the strain this war imposes on our resources is no exaggeration. Perhaps the high command may be criticized for not emphasizing this side of the picture more in the past, or perhaps the same criticism may be levelled at the Australian Government. Despite this, the view of the high command has been that the more slender are one's resources the more dangerous it is to be specific in revealing one's own losses and difficulties.

I have tried before to hit at these difficulties and my own view is that more latitude should have been allowed.

Finally, a holding war must surely be strong enough to hold the maximum blow of which Japan is capable. She may hold all other fronts and punch here. The Japanese are now strong in Aru and the Tenimber Islands, and one of the possibilities is a drive eastward from here along the south coast of New Guinea, where there are large navigable rivers which could provide good bases for Japanese float planes which are good fighters. Of the planes delivered here since General MacArthur's assumption of command two-thirds of them have come from America and approximately one-sixth each from British and Australian factories.

Soviet Mobilizes Scientists To Solve War Problems

SOVIET Russia, like every other country, has mobilized its scientists to solve war problems. Professor Alexander Baikov, vice-president of the Academy of Sciences, has distributed a report on the scientific programme for 1943, which we summarize in the following paragraphs:

As in the United States and Great Britain, the chief scientific and technological problems are presented by material resources. Under the direction of the Commission for the Mobilization of the Resources of the Urals, West Siberia and Kazakhastan, of the Commission for Mobilization of the Resources of the Middle Volga and Kama Regions and of other commissions, researches are to be conducted for the purpose of increasing the supply of raw materials for the essential war industries.

The Academy's geological and geographical departments are to intensify a search begun years ago to discover new deposits of manganese, nickel, tungsten and other ores as well as rocks which can be used for fireproofing. Though Russia has reconquered the Caucasus, explorations will be carried on to discover new oil fields. There is to be systematic prospecting for new coal deposits.

The production of motor fuel from coal and shale of the Urals, Karaganda and the Far East is also called for by the programme.

Agricultural Projects

In the field of agriculture the academy plans to increase the yield of cereal and industrial crops — rubber-bearing plants, cotton, sugar beet and potatoes. The problem of artificial fertilizers will be attacked by the chemists.

From Lenin's day to this, electrification of industry has been one of the Government's major aims. New power sources are therefore to be developed by the academy's department of technological sciences. Industrial gas-generating stations are to be developed, so as to reduce the task of the railroads. The department is also to deal with the economic restoration of the regions from which the Germans have been driven.

In chemistry, work will be concentrated on the industrial utilization of raw materials in the eastern regions and the production of synthetic rubber, plastics and drugs.

The Institute of Chemical Physics announces it will continue its study of the theory of combustion, and this for the reason that it is essential in the development of efficient engines. Alexander, Poral-Koshitz is to direct research which will indicate how the chemical products of coke in eastern industrial plants can be utilized. Peter Kapitza, once of Cambridge, is to carry on his work in liquefying gases despite the war.

Research on Wounds

The excellent medical research of the past is to be continued, chiefly to discover ways of healing wounds more rapidly than is now possible and to control infectious diseases. Shock and tetanus (lockjaw) are to be treated in accordance with a method developed by Line Stern of the academy — a method which involves the use of spinal injections.

Efforts will also be made to discover more effective blood-clotters, stimulants and pain and fatigue relievers.

That Russia will not confine her scientific activities entirely to war problems is evident from the work that mathematicians will do in the theory of numbers and in studying the dynamics of the atmosphere. Not only this, but the historians are to delve into the Slavic history of wars and international relations, the history of the first Great War, of Russian culture and of the present war.

It is announced that the Department of Languages and Literature is even compiling a work on changes in language. A dictionary of modern Russian, edited by Sergei Obnorsky, is to be prepared, and a study of the mutual influence of Russian and English literature in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries is also planned.

Cardboard Cats To Scare Pigeons

SACRAMENTO, Cal. (UP).—Who ever heard of a black cat working at an army air depot? It sounds silly, of course, but the Sacramento Air Depot, McClellan Field, has an even more fantastic practice—it has cardboard black cats working.

It seems that it all started way back in peacetime—around 1938, to be exact—when the air depot's engineering shops and hangars were invaded by pigeons. Birds from surrounding farms discovered that the rafters in the high ceiling were just made to order for a pigeon loft—a sort of emergency landing field and social gathering place.

Apprehensive workers on the floor below tried any number of devices. They closed the hangar doors, rigged up all sorts of scarecrows and noisemakers, and they even imported cats (of the animate variety), but the pigeons weren't impressed.

Finally someone suggested cardboard black cats—of the Hallowe'en party variety—which were suspended on wires from one side of the building to the other, just inside the entrance to the assembly line.

AGRICULTURE IS A FIRST PRINCIPLE: ON IT RESTS THE LIFE AND HAPPINESS OF MANKIND—Julian A. Dimock

Plan All Summer Vegetable Harvest

A PLAN set out by a garden expert with the object of providing fresh vegetables all season long as opposed to an early overabundant supply, followed by scarcity during the rest of the Summer and Fall with special relation to short-season vegetables is presented below.

Some crops, like Swiss chard, will remain in good condition all season and only one sowing need be made to produce a constant supply. On the other hand, early radishes mature in about three weeks and in another week are too pithy to eat. If you sow more than a week's supply at one time, the rest will be wsated. This applies to all short-season crops. Your sowing must be limited to the amount you can use during the period of good harvest.

How can this amount be figured? The table printed below lists these short-season crops.

In column 1 is given the time during which the harvest from one sowing remains in top condition. In column 2, the space in the garden row required to serve a family of four one meal. These figures are approximate, since gardening cannot be a precision job, but use them as a guide with broad tolerances and they will help you avoid serious waste and scarcity as well.

Crop	Col. 1	Col. 2
Beets, snap	4 weeks	1 foot
Beets	6 weeks	1 foot
Carrots	8 weeks	2 feet
Cucumbers	4 weeks	2 feet
Endive	8 weeks	1 foot
Lettuce	6 weeks	1 foot
Kohlrabi	3 weeks	2 feet
Turnips	2 weeks	1½ feet
Spinach	2 weeks	3 feet
Sweet Corn	10 days	4 feet
Onion Sets	4 weeks	1 foot
Peas	2 weeks	3 feet
Radish—
Early	1 week	1 foot
Summer	2 weeks	1 foot
Winter	6 weeks	1 foot

To determine the longest row of one vegetable to sow at a time, estimate the number of times your family will eat it during the period of harvest given in column 1. Multiply this by the number of feet in the garden row required for one serving, as given in column 2.

Take for example, beets. The period of best harvest from one planting is six weeks. How often will you serve beets in that period? Remember, three vegetable dishes a day should be the minimum this Summer, which means twenty-one family servings a week. Three servings a week, then, will be almost the minimum for any vegetable. At this rate, in six weeks you will need eighteen servings of beets. Multiply eighteen by one foot, the space in the row needed for one family serving, and you have eighteen, the maximum row that you should sow at one time. To allow for guests, and possible mishaps which may reduce your crop, sow twenty feet. And make two or three sowings, spaced about like this: Seven weeks between the first and second, five weeks between the second and third, because the second sowing will grow faster than the first and the third slower.

Go right through the list of the short-season vegetables with this kind of calculation. Never sow at one time more than the amount you can use while the crop is at its best. Space your succession sowings far enough apart so that two harvests will not overlap too much, giving you a wasteful surplus, followed by scarcity. An hour or two spent in figuring this out may save you days of misdirected labor in growing crops you cannot use when they mature.

Remember, in using the table, that gardening is not a precision operation. Do not try to cut the corners too closely. If your soil is not rich, give a little more space than the tables call for, and make liberal allowances for extra food for friends and guests.

Note, also, that food for putting up next Winter must be figured in addition to the Summer's supply for the family table.

Wormwoods Have Medicinal Virtues

The Artemisias, or Wormwoods, have long been grown for their aromatic and medicinal virtues, as well as for their ornamental foliage effects in the garden. Of the Artemisias native to certain sections of Western North America, several are available for gardens. Low Sage Bush (Artemisia arbuscula) has panicles of more or less insignificant brownish flowers, but the tiny silvery leaves are pleasing. Fairy Sage (Artemisia bigelovi) has grey-green leaves, attractive at all seasons, and a nice foil for the soft greyish-white flowers. Artemisia michauxiana, a twelve to eighteen-inch perennial, is a native of Canada as well as of the United States. It has woolly, grey divided leaves and spikes of inconspicuous flowers.

Wormwoods are good border plants and are used to some extent in rock gardens and to edge paths and borders. And, of course, they are planted in herb gardens. There Tarragon (Artemisia dracunculus) belongs. It is a two-foot bushy perennial with narrow grey-green leaves and little panicles of whitish-green flowers. Tarragon is not a particularly handsome plant and is grown primarily for its seasoning qualities, the fresh leaves being used to flavor vinegar and the dried, powdered leaves as a condiment in soups, salads and sandwich fillings.

From the Common Wormwood (Artemisia absinthium), the potent cordial, absinthe, is obtained. This three-foot, shrubby plant should be cut to the ground once during the Summer to control its tendency to spread. In late Summer the Common Wormwood bears racemes of small, ivory-white flowers; its large, deeply-cut leaves have a silvery coating as do the leaves of many of the Artemisias. In fact, the common name of Artemisia albula is Silver King, descriptive of the silver felt on its leaves. Silver King's flowerheads are of a greenish-yellow color and not particularly showy; but the plants is well worth having for its interesting foliage. It grows about four feet tall.

Silver Leaves

Fringed wormwood or mountain sage (Artemisia frigida), which is considered one of the best, has fragrant, finely divided, silvery grey leaves and nodding yellowish flowerheads. Its natural height is slightly more than a foot, but it can be cut back into low, compact clumps. Roman wormwood, too, makes attractive foliage clumps—quite feathery, because of the much-dissected leaves. Grey-green above, hoary beneath, they are particularly effective in the rock garden. Roman wormwood does not produce flowers often; in fact, it is a rare occasion when flowers appear.

Onions and Radishes First

Spring onions and early radishes give the first crops from the Victory garden. Both should be ready to eat in three weeks or a few days less from the time they are planted, and both can be planted as soon as the ground is prepared.

Radishes have little nutritive value, but are valued as appetizers, and a crisp, spicy radish from your own home garden is certainly stimulating. One or two of them will be relished, but one or two dozen will begin to palL and in all too many gardens there are dozens to eat, where two would be sufficient.

The cause of this is the very short season that early radishes remain edible. The earlier they are the shorter this season is because they are growing fast, and quickly pass by the edible stage on their way to the goal of all plant life, the production of seed.

With radishes, as with other crops, you must sow according to what you will eat. Figure out the number you will use in a week, and estimate that twelve early radishes can be produced in a foot of garden row. Then sow a week's supply of an early variety at a time. Midseason radishes will be usable for two weeks, so two weeks' supply of them can be sown. The early varieties do not grow well in hot weather. If you want a supply all Summer, sow a late, Summer variety for that season. But frequent sowings in small lots is a good rule for all except Winter radishes which take two months to mature and remain good for six weeks. They grow very large, some weighing several pounds.

One way to grow early radishes is to mix them with the seeds of parsley, parsnips, carrots and beets, all of which are slow to germinate. Not more than a tenth as many radishes as the other seeds should be used. The radishes will germinate quickly, "marking the row" where the other seeds lie, which will assist you in cultivating. Be sure to pull and eat the radishes as they mature before they can crowd the slower crops.

For the production of green onions larger sets are better than the very small ones. Onion sets from three-quarter to one inch in diameter or slightly larger, grow faster, because there has been stored up in the bulb plant food which is quickly made available for the growing plant and green onions grown from larger sets are likely to be more crisp and tender than when the same size of green onion is produced from smaller sets.

Don't forget to use the hoe often, even at the expense of your back. You will forget that when you have a delicious green salad plus some fresh vegetables for dinner.

Fruit Production on Small Places

BUSH and cane fruits, and even a fruit tree or two can be grown on a small place, and will help to add variety to the home-grown diet. In fairly large gardens, where space is not at too much of a premium, the cane fruits—raspberries, blackcaps or black raspberries—and the bush fruits—currants and gooseberries—are usually planted in regular garden rows.

They may be grown equally well, however, without giving them space in the vegetable plot. For an average family of four or five, no great number of plants will be required. A dozen each of two or three varieties of cane fruits, half a dozen currant bushes and three gooseberries, under normally favorable conditions, will supply plenty of fresh fruit and leave a moderate surplus for canning and preserving. As the cane fruits multiply rapidly, the size of the planting can readily be increased if that is found desirable.

A space-conserving method of growing several of the many types of raspberries on the small place is to utilize them as a hedge or a boundary fence. The long curving canes, if they are to be thoroughly self-supporting, should be headed back or pruned to two-thirds to three-quarters of their normal growth. This does not appreciably decrease the yield because the fruits are borne on laterals which grow out from the main canes. While the growth of untrimmed plants is normally rather spreading in habit, they can be confined with a fair degree of neatness within a given area by using stakes and wire and twine. This usually will not be necessary if they are cut back as suggested above. After fruiting the old canes should be cut back close to the ground.

Planting along a fence is another method of saving space with the cane fruits. This is especially desirable for the long vinelike types such as blackberries, dewberries and the several horticultural hybrids such as boysenberries, loganberries and youngberries which cannot be made to be self-supporting.

Strawberries require rich soil and good culture and should either be given space in the vegetable garden or a small plot to themselves. If well cared for and grown by the "hill" system, each plant should yield from a pint to a quart of berries. It is not necessary to devote a great deal of space to them in the hill system of growing (the runners are not allowed to spread and develop as they are in commercial plantings but are kept cut off close to the original crown or plant that has been set out).

Growing strawberries by the hill system has a further advantage that it makes the work of cultivating, fertilizing and mulching—and of rooting such runners as may be required for new plants—much easier than is the case when they are grown in a matted row.

Even on the very small place it is possible to grow some tree fruits. This is especially true nowadays when many of the best varieties can be obtained in the form of dwarf trees. This is done by means of grafting the variety on a dwarf stock. The size and quality of the fruit itself is not affected by this process. These little trees, if planted near the boundary line of the place, occupy very little room, and furthermore most of them, when in bloom in the Spring, are as beautiful as any ornamental shrub, so that they really serve a double purpose.

Butylene Gas Aids Tree Growth

The Russians have shown that butylene gas has a stimulating effect on the growth of trees, such as the apple, apricot, pear, cherry, plum, peach and walnut. A tree is enclosed in a tent for two weeks before the normal or desired leafing. Butylene is passed into the tents in concentrations of one part in 100,000 parts of air at temperatures between 60 degrees and 100 degrees Fahrenheit for a period of one to two hours.

Growing and Storing Root Crops

MOST root crops do best on a light to medium-textured soil. For all of them in general and for carrots in particular fresh manure is taboo. True, they require a good mechanical condition of the soil, but they should not be grown where fresh manure has been applied within a year, lest the roots become fibrous and forked.

As soon as the soil is workable in Spring half the recommended season's supply of commercial fertilizer may be broadcast before spading. If lime is to be applied, this, too, is done before spading, and the fertilizer is then raked into the surface four or five inches.

Starting with quick-maturing crops, a twenty-foot row each of beets and carrots may be sown as soon as the ground is prepared. A ten-foot row of radishes also may be put in if desired. Another planting of each vegetable can follow as soon as the first shows above ground. A succession of two or three rows of each in Spring and another sowing in Fall for immediate consumption and for storage should satisfy a family of four. This timing affords a rest from root crops in mid-Summer when other vegetables are plentiful. Succession plantings, properly timed, mean that root crops can be picked at a stage when they are most palatable. A beet one to one and a half inches in diameter, for instance, the epicure considers just about right, and one over two inches not fit to eat. Overgrown roots from early Spring planting are not worth saving for Winter storage.

Parsnips, as well as carrots for Fall harvesting, are planted between the first and fifteenth of June. This provides a reasonable time for them to mature without growing large and coarse by digging time. Turnips are at their best in late Fall, from a mid-August seed sowing. They are not injured by light frosts, but will not stand hard freezing.

Of the several common root crops, potatoes need specialized culture. Early April is a good time for planting in a trench six inches deep in soil not too heavily limed. First fertilizer is sprinkled in the bottom and covered with two inches of soil. Then the tubers, each cut to one or two eyes, are dropped in ten inches apart and covered with an inch of soil. As soon as they begin to sprout, the trench is gradually filled in. Mounding rows later in the season will help develop potatoes on the portions of the stems that are covered. Delicious new potatoes can be had by "grubbing" two or three of the tubers from each vine as soon as large enough for use. Early potatoes can be harvested at the time the vines die and up until mid-November. Unlike most other Spring-started vegetables, they can be stored successfully through the Winter if kept moderately damp and cool.

Sweet potatoes are practical, too, if the soil is well drained and on the sandy side. Plants are set fifteen to eighteen inches apart, during the last week in May. They are dug in the Fall as soon as the vines are killed by frost.

Carrots, beets and turnips are stored in slightly moist clean sand at a temperature ranging from 40 to 60 degrees Fahrenheit. Unless an aerated cellar is available this will probably have to be a special room to supply the proper conditions. A tub filled with water will help to keep the air moist and is a good safeguard against freezing.

Sweet potatoes are easily stored. They like furnace heat, for a couple of weeks at least. After drying for a time they are removed to the coolest part of a heated cellar where they can be left in a basket without covering until needed.

Parsnips and leeks likewise provide an easy storage problem. They do not even demand cellar space. They are left in the ground until about mid-November and dug before the ground freezes. Stored outdoors on the ground under a light mulch they can be used any time during the Winter.

Transplanting The Seedlings

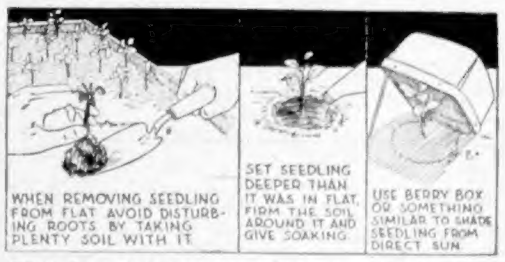
When the garden seedlings have developed they should be moved to more roomy quarters. The seedlings at this time can be transplanted to another flat and spaced two inches apart, or they can be moved into individual pots or one-quart berry boxes.

A wooden berry box will easily hold nine plants (three each way). No drainage material is required in the bottom of a berry box because of the cracks in its corner construction.

In preparation for transplanting, water the flat several hours before the seedlings are to be lifted, so that the soil will more readily cake and cling to the roots of the tiny plants. Use an ordinary table fork to lift each plant, taking care, of course, not to loosen the ball of earth about the roots.

In the soil into which a seedling is to be transferred make a hole large enough so the roots can be placed in position without crowding them. Press the soil gently but firmly around the roots of each plant with a dibble.

Care Needed to Transplant Plants



When plants which have been given a head start indoors are set in their places in the garden, care should be taken to avoid transplanting shock, which is sometimes compared to the effect of an operation on a human being.

Even though careless treatment may not kill a plant, it may result in an ailing plant which will never recover full vigor.

Planting out too early is one cause of trouble. A plant grown indoors, even of a hardy variety, is likely to be somewhat soft, and cold weather may cause a setback in its growth which will sacrifice any advantage which an earlier shift to outdoors might otherwise have given.

If the plant has no soil about its roots, broken roots should be cut with a sharp knife, and long tap roots shortened. A hole sufficiently large to contain the roots without crowding should be dug, and fine soil filled in about the roots, so that air pockets are excluded and there is firm contact between roots and soil. If the soil is sufficiently loose, and fine, a quick method of transplanting is to plunge a trowel deep into the soil, then push the handle away, thus opening up a hole. Without removing the trowel set the plant in this space, in contact with the soil on one side, then carefully remove the trowel and firm the soil around the roots. Contact between the roots and soil is more important than the even spreading out of the roots.

Plants should usually be set in the garden a little lower than they stood in the flat or pot.

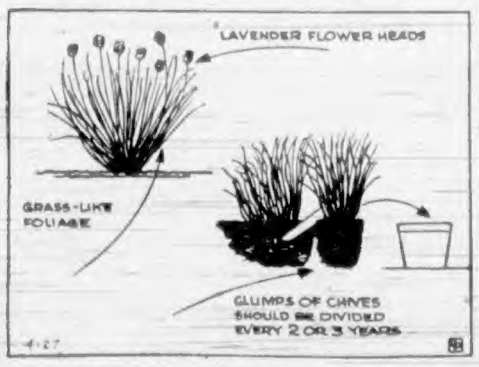
The trimming of leaves is no longer advised. By planting in cloudy weather, or in the evening, wilting may be avoided. If a considerable area of leaves is removed the shock to the plant will be increased.

In handling pot plants, or those started in plant bands, disturb the roots as little as possible. Do not compress the soil in which they are growing. This is usually moist and temptation to mold it into a little mud ball is strong, but you may form a hard ball of soil from which the roots will be slow to emerge, with the result that the plant is stunted.

Starter solutions are popular for giving newly transplanted seedlings a stimulant to speed up adjustment in their new home. A handful of your usual plant food stirred into a bucket of water will provide this. After the plant has been properly set in its new position and soil firmed about it, pour on a cupful of this liquid to soak the soil in which the plant stands.

Plant food may also be applied dry. In this case mix a tablespoonful of your usual plant food with the soil which has been taken out in preparing the hole. Mix it thoroughly, and it will not harm the plant roots; then, when the soil has been well firmed about the plant, pour on a cup of water. This will dissolve some of the food and make it available to the plant.

Chives Deserve Place in Garden



By DEAN HALLIDAY
Released by Central Press Association

Chives are hardy perennial herbs and are easy to grow their delicate onion flavoring. They are especially valuable for and are used chiefly in salads, omelettes, sauces, stews and cottage or cream cheeses. It is because of these many uses as a flavoring that chives deserve a place in the victory garden.

As illustrated in the accompanying garden-graph, chives as a growing plant are very attractive. The plant produces small round flower heads of lavender which remain in bloom for several weeks. The foliage is grass-like. Chives make good edging plants for the victory vegetable garden for they form dense mats and make a permanent planting.

Chives should be dug up every second or third year and divided, otherwise they grow too thickly or mat-like. One good method of keeping chives in bounds is to dig them up each Fall and then cut off a section of tops and roots, as illustrated, and pot them for use indoors as a kitchen herb. Chives so treated will keep on growing if placed in a sunny window.

Chives can be grown from seeds or by division of the bulbs. The bulb is three-quarters of an inch long and has many rootlets. Any neighbor who has chives growing in the garden will be glad to share a few of the bulbs.

Adam and Eve In the Garden

"AND the Lord God planted a garden in Eden, where He put man whom He formed," so the Bible tells the story of the first garden and the first man. "And out of the ground made the Lord to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

"And the Lord God took the man and put him in the Garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it. And the Lord God commanded the man, saying: 'Of every tree in the garden thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die.'"

Adam worked in the beautiful garden. He took care of the flowers and trees and the animals, giving them names, for they were not afraid of him. The Lord God considered it was not good for Adam to live alone, so He sent him a wife, named Eve.

At first they were happy; for they were pure and holy, and had no fear of evil. Adam told his wife what the Lord God had said about the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, and how they had been commanded not to eat of it.

It happened one day, however, that when Eve was walking alone near the tree a serpent spoke to her and said: "Yea, hath God said, 'Ye shall not eat of every tree in the garden?'"

Eve answered the serpent: "We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden; but of the fruit of the tree that is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, 'Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye may die.'"

And the serpent said unto the woman, "Ye shall not surely die."

Perhaps Eve had longed to eat of the tree before the serpent tempted her, and now, as she looked at the lovely fruit, she began to think that the Lord God had been unkind in forbidding her to eat of it, and she believed the wicked serpent instead of the Lord God, her Friend. So she took some of the fruit and ate it, and then she gave some to Adam, and he ate of it also.

But, alas! the moment they had eaten the fruit, they understood what doing wrong meant, and for the first time they felt ashamed. In the beginning they had not needed to wear any clothes, but now they took some large fig leaves and sewed them together to cover themselves.

But when the sun went down and the air grew cool, Adam and his wife heard God walking in the garden. Their fear grew greater every moment, and whereas on other days they had always hurried forth with joy to meet the Lord God, now they hid themselves among the thick trees. Then the Lord God called to Adam, and Adam had to come forth and confess to God that he had hidden himself because he was ashamed.

And God said to Adam, gravely: "Hast thou eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee that thou should not eat?"

Then Adam blamed Eve, who told God it was the serpent that had tempted her.

And now the happy times in the garden were over and God was obliged to send Adam and Eve into the wide world to work hard and to bear pain and trouble.

Since then, as all know, when the right time comes, all people die and leave this world which, though beautiful, has been spoiled by sin in order that they may live again in the Heaven which God has prepared for His children. So God, in the end, will conquer all sin and pain.

Wisdom of a Mother Cat

Few of us give the cat credit for its remarkable intelligence, possibly because of its retiring and undemonstrative nature. However, a mother cat will fight to the death for her young, and is tireless in providing for them. At other times she is shrinking.

I once owned a mother cat with three tiny kittens. We kept them in a vacant room just off the kitchen. One day, while I was preparing dinner, she came into the kitchen and began to cry for food. I was too busy to bother with her just then and paid no attention to her. Finding her pleading ineffective, she went to her room, brought back one of her babies, laid it at my feet, and looked up at me with a plaintive "Meow!" ("Just see what I have to feed!") Her strategy won.

Buttercup, Poppy, Forget-Me-Not

Buttercup, Poppy, Forget-me-not—
These three bloomed in a garden spot;
And once, all merry with song and play,
A little one heard three voices say:
"Shine and shadow, Summer and Spring,
Oh, thou child with the tangled hair
And laughing eyes; we three shall bring
Each an offering passing fair."
The little one did not understand,
But they kent and kissed the dimpled hand.

Buttercup gamboled all day long,
Sharing the little one's mirth and song;
Then, stealing along on misty gleams,
Poppy came bearing the sweetest dreams.
Playing and dreaming—and that was all
Till once a sleeper would not awake;
Kissing the little face under the pall,
We thought of the words the third flower spake;
And we found betimes in a hallowed spot
The solace and peace of Forget-me-not.

Buttercup shareth the joy of day,
Glinting with gold the hours of play;
Bringeth the Poppy sweet repose,
When the hands would fold and the eyes would close;
And after it all—the play and the sleep
Of a little life—what cometh then?
To the hearts that ache and the eyes that weep
A new flower bringeth God's peace again.
And each one serveth its tender lot—
Buttercup, Poppy, and Forget-me-not.

The Wolf and The Lamb

According to one of Æsop's fables a wolf, meeting with a lamb astray from the fold, resolved not to lay violent hands on him, but to find some plea, which should justify to the lamb himself his right to eat him. He thus addressed him, "Sirrah, last year you grossly insulted me."

"Indeed," bleated the lamb in a mournful tone of voice, "I was not then born."

Then said the wolf, "You feed in my pasture."

"No, good sir," replied the lamb, "I have not yet tasted grass."

Again said the wolf, "You drink of my well."

"No," exclaimed the lamb, "I never yet drank water, for as yet my mother's milk is both food and drink to me." On which the wolf seized him, and ate him up, saying, "Well, I won't remain supperless even though you refute every one of my implications."

And the moral of this tale is—the tyrant will always find a pretext for his tyranny, and it is useless for the innocent to try by reasoning to get justice, when the oppressor intends to be unjust.

Spies Play Their Part in Wartime

INTELLIGENCE—one of the army's services has wide range of branches and among them are those which engage in spying within the domain of the enemy; a hazardous job with death as the penalty of detection and yet those willing to serve are found ready, believing as Nathan Hale said that "every kind of service necessary for the public good becomes honorable by being necessary."

Major J. T. Gorman, who wrote of spies, tells of how one of England's greatest kings was willing to serve as a spy. When Alfred the Great was in Athelney during the Danish invasion, he disguised himself as a minstrel and went, with one faithful friend, into the enemy's camp. He, in his guise as a wandering minstrel, was allowed into the banqueting hall of the Danish king and remained there several days to obtain much valuable information. When he returned to his own army, Alfred had learned all that was necessary to defeat the enemy—as the Danes discovered soon afterwards.

The Bible has its spy stories. The Old Testament tells of men sent by Joshua to spy out the land, even Jericho; how they were discovered and pursued; and how a woman saved them by her cleverness and bravery, hiding them under the stalks of drying flax spread on the roof of her house. Afterwards she let them down from the city wall, to hide in a cave until their pursuers had given up the chase, and the spies were able to return with their information to the Israelitish army.

The Romans had a great military spy service; in fact, in all wars there have been spies and many have had great exploits and desperate adventures. During the Jacobite rebellion the spies of the Jacobites were particularly bold and daring, carrying messages to and from the Continent in an amazing number of secret ways. One of them, Fuller, was taken prisoner and searched over and over again—until at last letters were discovered inside his buttons. Even then there seemed to be nothing particularly secret about these communications until they were held close to a pan of burning charcoal; then other words appeared, written between the lines, invisibly.

During the American War of Independence there were two famous spies—one on each side. One, Major John Andre is buried in Westminster Abbey. He was taken prisoner by the Americans in 1774 and became friendly with many of his captors. Later, in 1779, when Andre had been released and was on the staff at the British headquarters, one of his American acquaintances, General Benedict Arnold, began to correspond with the British, suggesting that if paid well, he would deliver up the fortress of West Point, which he commanded. Andre agreed to meet him in neutral territory, but frightened of his own party and of Andre too, Benedict played a double trick and contrived that the Major should be taken prisoner after he had decoyed him into enemy territory in disguise. Meanwhile the Americans had discovered Arnold's treachery and no mercy was shown, Andre being hanged.

Captain Nathan Hale, who was hanged by the British—his last saying was "I regret that I have only one life to give for my country"—was a spy for George Washington, and volunteered to go into the British lines on Long Island to try to discover their plans. He went as a schoolmaster, in Quaker dress, and was received everywhere in the British camp. At night he made plans, maps and notes in Latin, which were concealed in the soles of his shoes. But someone suspected and betrayed him, and some days later, when he returned to the boat which was to ferry him back to the mainland, he found it manned by British marines, who made him a prisoner.

Vidocq was a spy employed by Napoleon's secret police and he had the extraordinary power to disguise his face without use of make-up or paint. He altered its shape, age, expression with lightning speed by some marvelous control of his muscles.

Spies were employed to very great extent in the United States Civil War, made easier because both armies spoke the same language, though differences of accent sometimes led to capture. Even in Old Testament times differences of dialect betrayed disguised soldiers. When the Ephraimites tried to cross the fords sentries posted there made them say "Shibboleth," and if they pronounced it "Sibboleth," in a lisping way, the sentries knew they were of the enemy's camp. Among the boldest of the Confederate spies were women—Belle Boyd, Emma Edmonds, Calamity Jane. Belle Boyd was a young girl, who, when the Federals took Martinsburg and set up headquarters in her father's house, constantly carried information to Southern generals.

Once, when an important council was held, she crouched in a cupboard over the room and listened at a knothole in the floor and took down in shorthand what was said. So cramped was she that when the council ended she fainted and lay unconscious in the cupboard for some time; but when she recovered she was off, on her pony to carry her report to the Southern headquarters. In the end this brave girl was taken prisoner, but was released and allowed to go to England.

Charles Newcombe, a Northern spy, was a daredevil who had some extraordinary escapes. At one time he was caught, sentenced to be hanged, and confined in a log cabin, fettered with ball and chain, and a sentry was posted at the door. The spy was strong, and managed to drag himself up to the crosspiece over the door, swinging the six-pound ball clear of the ground and stunning the sentry as he passed. He wrenched off his fetters with the sentry's bayonet and escaped. His fortune favored him long, but before the war ended he was caught and hanged.

British spies have often disguised as natives. A famous case was that of the galant Kavanagh, who carried a letter from Sir James Outram, in besieged Lucknow during the Indian Mutiny, to the relieving force, at great risk, disguised as a native. He was born in India, knew the language well, and managed to make himself look the part.

It was said that the Jameson Raid of 1896 failed through the clever work of a Boer spy. When Doctor Jim and his raiders were marching on Johannesburg a stranger came pretending delight at the object of the raid. But, he told them, their guide was misleading them and they were on the wrong road. Despite his protests the guide was displaced and the plausible stranger—one of Kruger's spies—led the column straight into a Boer ambush—which brought the expedition to an end.

During the former European war the bravery of spies surpassed much that went before. There were many of them. One of the notable spies was a French girl, Louise de Bettignies, known as "Alice," who showed great bravery and cleverness in carrying information from the territory occupied by the enemy, to the British. She had many adventures, sometimes being arrested by the Germans while carrying important papers, but on each occasion managed to dispose of them before being searched. On one occasion when stopped at a frontier post to be searched she flung her little handbag down in such a careless way under the noses of the Germans that they did not consider it held anything of importance and did not even open it. The brave girl was caught at last when worn out by incessant labors, so that she could not think with her usual quickness—the danger that threatens spies—and was executed by the Germans.

Another spy of the former European war was Walter Greenway, who had lived at Aden for years, where he learned the ways and language of the natives and had learned German previously. With powers of mimicry, knowledge of languages and swarthy complexion, he dressed as a native and wandered into the Turkish lines in Mesopotamia, pretending to be a deaf and dumb Bedouin, more or less of an idiot, "afflicted by Allah," which made the Turks inclined to treat him kindly.

But he was far from deaf; he listened to conversations of Turk and German officers, then crept to the British lines with his information, carrying it so secretly that British soldiers believed him to be an Arab. Several times he went to and fro; and then the Turks found out that he had been in the enemy lines, and began to suspect. They determined to find out if he was truly deaf and dumb as he pretended. They fired rifles close to his ears, and led him so close to big guns that concussion of their firing made his ears and nose bleed; but he made no sign of having heard anything.

Then they did worse. His flesh was seared with hot irons; his fingernails were torn off in an effort to make him speak and betray himself; but the brave spy said not a single word, and the Turks were at last convinced, and let him go. Greenway managed to drag himself back to the British, and told them his news, but he nearly died from the effect of his torture, and his left arm had to be amputated. He could serve the army no more. He went back, broken in body, though not in spirit, to his farm near Aden.

Donkey Firm; Not Stupid

The donkey is supposed to be a stupid animal. He is not really stupid, but has a firm will, and likes to have his own way. The donkey has long ears and a long head, and a thin little tail with a plume of hair at the end. The donkey can live on very poor food and is a wonderful hill climber.

In mountainous countries, men would not be able to get along without donkeys to do much of the hard work. These animals climb like goats. They carry heavy burdens on their backs and walk along narrow stony tracks up the mountain sides where no horse could stand.

St. Francis of Assisi

Long ago, in Assisi town,
God's troubadour, in tattered gown,
Walked midst the simple folk,
Talked of kindness and of love
To man and bird and beast.
"Give praise," he said, "to God above
From greatest unto least."

On fluttering wings
Birds circled round his head.
They felt his love of living things
And in their hearts there was no dread.
"Little feathered brothers," said the Saint,
"Sing, sing to God your praise.
He hears your joyful cry
Mingled with the choirs on high."

At his words, sweet music burst
From all the tiny throats . . .
On waves of sound it was upborne
Until it reached God on His throne
And Francis saw His smile . . .
"Praise God, all ye that live," he cried,
"God loves us, every one!"

The Kite That Went To the Moon

MANY years ago in the Child's Garden of Stories, Maude Elizabeth Paterson told the story of Ning-Ting. He was a funny little boy who lived in China and instead of wearing his hair cropped short it was all shaved off except a piece at the back which was plaited into a queue. He also wore baggy little trousers and queer, tiny shoes, turned up at the toes.

One day Ning-Ting was sitting at the table eating his supper of rice with two little chop-sticks. He was very sleepy, and every now and then his head nodded, and his mother called, "Ning-Ting, wake up and eat your supper." "I am not asleep, mother," answered Ning-Ting "I was only thinking." This is what Ning-Ting is thinking about.

Next door to Ning-Ting lived his uncle, Pon-ge-wan-ge, and his little boy, Ning-Ting's cousin, Foo-Choo. Uncle Pon-ge-wan-ge was the owner of a little shop. He had all kinds of pretty fans and jars for sale. When Foo-Choo's birthday came, he gave him a very large kite made of colored paper, and with a long, long tail. Ning-Ting and Foo-Choo had such fun with it on windy days; away up in the clouds it would fly, and on very windy days both boys had to hold on to the stick.

But Ning-Ting kept thinking how very nice it would be if he could only have the kite all to himself; and one windy day, when Uncle Pon-ge-wan-ge and Foo-Choo were away on a visit, Ning-Ting climbed over the fence into Foo-Choo's yard. Going on tiptoe across the yard, he went inside the shed and up the ladder to the hayloft, where he knew the kite was kept. Just as he was tiptoeing across the floor, he heard a thump, thump. Ning-Ting jumped and looked around with eyes of terror; it was only the cat—but you know a little voice inside of Ning-Ting kept telling him he was doing something wrong.

But, although he was frightened, Ning-Ting did not listen to the little voice and, taking up the kite, he carried it carefully down the ladder, across the yard, and over the fence into his own yard. Then, holding tightly on to the stick, he let the kite go and away it went, swinging gracefully with its long tail, higher and higher and higher, until all the string was untwined from the stick, and then Ning-Ting could feel the kite pulling him off his feet. He thought this is good fun, and as the kite pulled him he went up and down on his heels and toes. "I do believe if I let myself go the kite would lift me on top of the shed," he said to himself. And, yes, it was true. As soon as he stopped pulling, the kite lifted him high up on top of the shed.

Just then Ning-Ting heard voices and, looking down into the next yard, he saw Uncle Pon-ge-wan-ge and Foo Choo. He was so frightened that he let the kite pull him away to the top of the poplar tree, and Uncle Pon-ge-wan-ge and Foo-Choo looking up, wondering what kind of a queer bird was on top of the tree. Ning-Ting saw them looking and, grasping the stick tightly when the next gust of wind came, allowed the kite to pull him away—up, up, up, to the clouds.

Poor Ning-Ting dared not look down. And as it was just about sunset, it began to grow dark and he could feel something crawling up his back like a snake. It was only his pigtail after all, and just then a large, round yellow face loomed up—the man in the moon. "Halloo, how did you get here?" he cried to Ning-Ting. "The kite brought me," said Ning-Ting. "Oh, did it?" said the Man in the Moon; "and pray whose kite is it—yours?" "No-oo-oo," said poor Ning-Ting, and then he began to cry. "Boo-hoo, boo-hoo, boo-hoo, I want to go home! I want to go home!" "Oh, do you?" said the Man in the Moon, and, taking out a large knife, he cut the string of the kite, and with a thump and a bang down came Ning-Ting to earth again.

Just then he heard some one calling, "Ning-Ting, Ning-Ting, wake up, wake up, you have fallen out of your chair." And Ning-Ting found himself on the floor, with his mother bending over him. "The Man in the Moon, he cut the string; the Man in the Moon, he cut the string," he mumbled. "Oh, Ning-Ting, you have been dreaming," said his mother. "Come, and I shall help you to bed." And I think Ning-Ting was glad it was all a dream, don't you?

The Stars And Stripes

The flag of the United States, the "Stars and Stripes," was first unfurled over a warship by John Paul Jones, when he took command of the "Ranger," in June, 1777, and the American flag was first carried in battle in September of the same year at Brandywine. At first, there was some confusion regarding the red and white stripes and when Vermont and Kentucky entered the Union in 1791 and 1792, two additional stripes were added. However, in 1818, the thirteen stripes were readopted as standard, and a star was added in the blue field for each new state. With the admission of Arizona in 1912, the forty-eighth star appeared on the flag and completed the "Stars and Stripes" that we know today.

In the early days of the American Revolution, each state fought under its own flag. In 1775 a uniform ensign was adopted, which carried the Union Jack of Britain in the corner, on a background of thirteen alternate red and white stripes. After the Declaration of Independence was signed, the colonists refused to use the Union Jack, and so, on June 14, 1777, the Continental Congress decided on a design for a national flag.

A committee consisting of George Ross, Robert Morris and George Washington, called on Betsy Ross at her home in Arch Street, Philadelphia, and asked her to make the flag. So successful was she, that she received a contract to make all the government flags, a business which remained in her family until 1857.

Albatross Is Sailors' Friend

The great wandering albatross of the lonely southern seas is one of the few birds who care nothing for land, living their quiet lives in perfect contentment over the rolling ocean waves, a true lover of the sea—the sailor's friend.

Actually the albatross holds a strange spell over the sailor. He believes this bird, following a ship for days at a time with seemingly motionless wings, possesses an unnatural power, and no sailor is so bold as to harm one of them. About this old superstition Coleridge constructed his well-known poem, "The Ancient Mariner."

The wandering albatross is the largest of all water birds, and it has the greatest wing expanse of the entire bird kingdom, its wings often measuring ten to fourteen feet from tip to tip. This tremendous wing-spread seems a bit out of proportion, for the body of the albatross seldom weighs as much as eighteen pounds, but when one considers the fact that the albatross lives entirely on the wing, the need for very powerful wings can be seen. Only when it comes to the surface of the sea long enough to snatch a fish or a bit of refuse from a ship does the albatross light momentarily. When it wishes to rise again it lifts its great wings and runs along the top of the water for seventy or eighty yards before it can attain "take-off" speed and again reach its natural home—the sky.

Unlike most species of birds, both the male and female albatross dress exactly alike. They are dressed very warmly, too, for Mother Nature has given them an excellent coat of fine black and white feathers.

"Boy Scouts, Boy Scouts, have you any wool?, Yes, sir. Yes, sir. Hundreds of bags full." So sing Toronto Scouts, including the new 20let "All Nations" Troop, whose collection of tailors' wool trimmings is shown above. The boys are of Polish, Finnish, Jewish, Russian, Ukrainian, French-Canadian and Anglo-Saxon Origin.

His Honor Lieut.-General Kendall of Nova Scotia signs the Log at the opening of the new Tweedsmuir Room, Halifax, the enlarged club room for former Boy Scouts now in the services. The Log contains 1,560 signatures, representing every part of the Empire, and every rank up to admirals. With the Lieut.-Governor are President W. C. Nickerson and Provincial Commissioner Tibbs of the Boy Scouts Association.

Great Britain and the Dominions Overseas

Minesweepers at Malta Kept the Channels Open During Island's Blitz

Difficult Work Keeping Valletta Harbor Open, but the Fleet Has Done Fine Job

By GEORGE PALMER
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

ABOARD BRITISH MINESWEEPER OFF MALTESE COAST (UP).—This sturdy ship and a flotilla of others like her are perhaps the most unsung, yet most important, little vessels in the world so far as Malta is concerned. The job they've done, sweeping enemy mines from the entrance to Valletta Grand Harbor, stands as a glowing tribute to the perseverance of the Royal Navy.

Granted that merchant ships which brought food and other valuable stores to the people of the island and war material to the three services, were the "headliners" of the sea in Maltese eyes during the trying months of yesterday. But it must be remembered that if it were not for the mine-sweeping flotilla there would have been no channels of safety through which the merchantmen could pass. They would have been unable to unload their cargoes if the sweepers had not kept the channel open.

Only naval vessels of the fleet to remain at Malta throughout the entire blitz when other ships were removed to safer ports, the mine sweepers worked night and day plying the choppy waters off Malta charting German and Italian parachute mines as they were dropped and sweeping them out of the sea the following day.

Sweep Front Steps

"We are the old ladies who sweep the front steps of Malta," Lieut.-Commander H. S. Jerome, leader of this flotilla, told me on the bridge. "We aren't very pretty and we don't have the nice figures or the speed of the younger girls of the fleet, but we ducked all the bombs and kept all the sidewalks clean for the boys who brought home the bacon."

Jerome, Mexican-born, with an American wife now living in St. Louis, told me, "I don't come from anywhere," when I asked him where his home was. He is a veteran of twenty-nine years in the Royal Navy, twenty-six of which were spent on active service in all parts of the world, and he is anxious for the day when every mine will be blown out of Maltese waters and he will be able to see his American-born son.

"It has been a difficult job keeping Valletta harbor open," Jerome said, "but the flotilla has been marvelous through it all. The men have labored under the most trying conditions, but they have kept their ships in tip-top shape and worked steadily night and day in all kinds of weather."

Sink U-Boats En Route

He didn't have to enlarge on that statement to convince me, for this ship was rolling heavily in an extremely rough sea and the men were having a difficult time of it putting out their cables and sweeping devices. Furthermore, this was a "good day," so to speak. It was bright and sunny, and there were no Axis aircraft to roar out of the clouds and spew machine-gun bullets and cannon shells at the sweepers as they plodded along scooping up the enemy's sea traps.

This particular sweeper, a veteran of operations in Russian waters, has exploded thirty-six Axis mines, and its proudest boast is that it once touched off thirteen mines in seven minutes. During its voyage from the Murmansk patrol area it sank one U-boat and shot down four enemy airplanes, "just to sort of warm up its guns," as Jerome put it. Her captain, Lieut.-Comdr. Andrew E. Doran, R.N., smilingly interrupted to describe these successes as "a bit of target practice for the boys" while en route to Malta.

"One of the ship's proudest moments," one of her officers told me, "came the day when she was chosen to lead in the first convoy of merchant ships to make the trip from the eastern end of the Mediterranean in more than a year."

Maltese Cheered

That happened last November when two American Liberty ships and British and Dutch supply ships followed the sweeper through the Valletta-swept channel amid cheers from the people of Malta, who stood on the island's rocky cliffs to welcome the convoy that was the first in a long series of convoys which restocked the island and made Malta's Christmas a merry one.

Now, just as we are doing today, the Malta mine sweepers are hard at work clearing the island waters. The channels long since have been opened, but there are hundreds of other areas studded with enemy mines, and all those eventually must be cleared. And you can rest assured they will be, for sweeping mines under cover of strong R.A.F. support, which keeps enemy planes away from the island, is a pleasant assignment for the brave little ships that kept right on working through the worst of the Malta blitz.

Prime Minister Smuts Prepares For Election

Indian Penetration of Natal Provides Problem

CAPETOWN (CP).—Assuring their own "united front" in the light of the forthcoming general election—now not expected till September—Prime Minister Smuts and Finance Minister Hofmeyer attended a caucus of the United party (Government), where it is believed a settlement was reached on the differences of opinion on the proposed legislation restricting acquisition of property in Natal by Asiatics.

It is believed there is now no question of Mr. Hofmeyer leaving the Cabinet, despite his strong views on the rights of East Indians in South Africa.

The Indian penetration of Natal, according to some parliamentary correspondents, had become a major political crisis. The Justice Broome report, tabled in the Union House of Assembly, stated Indians were buying property in and around South Africa's east coast city of Durban on a higher scale than ever before.

The New Order group in the South African Parliament, led by Oswald Pirow, has announced that none of its members will offer themselves as candidates in the forthcoming Union or provincial elections.

Reconstruction Plans

It is understood the Prime Minister has decided to create a Ministry of Reconstruction in the near future. He will not for the time being add a minister, but will entrust the work to Commerce and Industries Minister Sydney F. Waterson, up to recently High Commissioner to London.

In the immediate post-war period the new ministry will be endowed with considerable executive powers and financial resources and will be South Africa's most important department of state. In the meantime the ministry's important function will be to keep in close touch with international developments so that South Africa's own plans can be co-ordinated with the world trend.

Natives and Problems

Minister of the Interior H. G. Lawrence met organized opposition to the proposals for new colored (Negro) advisory councils by declaring that the majority of colored people wanted councils. He said he would "not be stampeded by a noisy coterie that included both Europeans and Indians" (East Indians).

Graduation day at Forthare Native (Negro) University College attracted an unusually large gathering of people interested in natives' education and the advancement of the race. Two native students became masters of arts, one a bachelor of laws, thirty-six bachelors of arts, eight bachelors of science and one bachelor of economics.

Welcoming the Governor-General of Portuguese Angola, Commandant Defreitas Morna, who with his wife arrived as guest of the South African Government, Prime Minister Smuts said: "Acts of our pioneers will no longer carry us forward but in the fulfillment of the co-ordinated needs of modern civilization which are rapidly conquering the former dark continent there are far-reaching possibilities in good neighborly relations."

Significant South African wartime achievement is the design and manufacture of radio direction-finding equipment in the Union. The man responsible is E. T. Price, president of the South African Institute of Electrical Engineers. The new invention combats leakage of information by radio transmitters difficult to locate.

Wartime Street Cleaner Likes Her Job Better Than Anything Else

Street Sweeper of Soho Discusses Her Work and Interesting People She Meets

By DENISE DALTROFF
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON (CP).—In wartime Britain women do everything from shipbuilding to street sweeping. As you watch them sometimes at laborious, crude work, you wonder how they feel about it.

In Soho, peacetime home of quaint foreign restaurants and European shops, plump Florence Sharp was discovered plying her trade as street sweeper. She was induced to go before the microphone and tell how it felt to be a woman working at what one time was essentially a man's business. In her narrative she told how she "liked road sweeping better than anything else" she ever had done before her husband was killed in a pub during an air raid.

It also developed within her a homey philosophy. She notices things about people and life that she had never realized before. "You see life on this job," she said thoughtfully. "You really do. You see how people are happy and you see how they are sad and miserable. You see everything that's going on in life."

"Take the old ladies. They're all very nice to us, although I must say they are a bit queer sometimes. I had one old lady come up this morning and she just stood there and roared with laughter. I said 'What the matter with you?' She just stood there and laughed. I don't know what there was to laugh at, I'm sure."

"Sometimes people come up to us and say 'What lovely work you do. We're proud of you' and pat you on the back. Then they say 'Won't you have a drink?' Lots of people are very rude . . ." said Florence.

"We watch different people every day. We watch the funny side of them all right. You get every nationality in the world in Soho. We see fights and rows and people locked up. It's very interesting round there really, especially when the pubs turn out. And all the time you feel you're doing something for your country. You feel you're helping in some way."

And if you think romance disappears in the street-sweeping business, listen to what Florence says about her private life:

"Lots of fellows who have met me on my beat want to marry me. . . . I could have been married hundreds of times. . . . But I've lost interest in men since I lost my husband. . . ."

AFTER BRITISH BOMBS FELL ON TURIN, ITALY

Here is certain proof of the damage which British bombs are wreaking on Italian cities. The city is Turin, Italy's big railway centre, and the picture, Italian. No Italian pictures were published of the railroad yards, roundhouse, munition plants and factories which were also severely damaged by British bombers.

Pressure on Czechs To Offset Losses Of Bombed Factories

LONDON.—German war production men are bringing pressure to bear on Czechoslovak industrialists in the "protectorate" to increase their output to offset the losses of bombed Reich factories, reports reaching Allied circles disclose.

Special meetings of managers of armament works have been called in recent weeks at Prague, Brno, Prerov and Pardubice in the presence of the inspector of armaments for the "protectorate," the chairman of the armaments commission, Major-General Hernekamp, and others.

Pigeon of R.A.F. Bomber Command Given Sick Leave

Bronzey Cracked On 199th Flight

LONDON (UP).—This is the story of "Bronzey," the most experienced pigeon of the R.A.F. Bomber Command.

Bronzey has just been given sick leave and is temporarily out of action—but that's getting ahead of the tale.

Two and a half years ago, this pigeon enlisted in the R.A.F. when her owner lent her to the National Pigeon Service for war work. Her job was to be ready to take messages back to base in case of emergency, and she went along in a yellow metal cannister, which was her post aboard the bombers.

At first Bronzey flew in Wellingtons; then she graduated to four-engined Halifaxes. She traveled more than 160,000 miles and went out on operations 199 times. She was never air sick, not even in the most violent actions, when the pilot had to hurl his bomber around the sky to escape bursting ack-ack fire.

But the 199th time Bronzey flew out in a Halifax bomber, the plane ran into a particularly hot barrage over an important target in Germany. It was hit several times, but managed to limp home. However, as it landed at its base, flames resulting from the damage burst from the fuselage.

Bronzey, in her metal cannister, was trapped by the fire and her fellow crew members feared for her life. But when the fire was extinguished, she was found to be still alive, even though the cannister was slightly scorched.

Examination proved that Bronzey was suffering from shock and after the crackup she lost weight. So sick leave was prescribed. But her R.A.F. buddies are positive that Bronzey will soon be back as good as new for her 200th flight over enemy territory.

Aid Sent by the Empire For the Soviets Makes Very Impressive Showing

Wide Array of Goods Forwarded by Many Parts of the Empire for Russia's Needs

By LOUIS V. HUNTER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON (CP).—Remarkable figures showing the extent of the help of Britain and the Empire in supplying Russia with essential requirements were given by an official of the United Kingdom Commercial Corporation, a trading organization backed by the British Government.

Non-military supplies placed through the corporation already exceed £50,000,000 ($225,000,000) in value and represents hundreds of thousands of tons of merchandise of all kinds.

The spokesman explained that within a fortnight of Germany's invasion of Russia, the corporation had become purchasing agent for Soviet orders placed through this country all over the world.

The list of goods supplied ranges from the smallest of tools to large, mobile, self-appointed electric-power generating units to replace those destroyed in areas devastated by the Germans or to supplement existing plants, raw materials from aluminum to zinc, and foodstuffs such as wheat or tea. Vast quantities of rubber and some 26,000 tons of tin have been dispatched, and consignments are still going forward.

Rubber and Tin

"Rubber is now being shipped in thousands of tons from Ceylon," the official said. "Cornwall is providing tin in substantial tonnages, and to meet an urgent request for industrial diamonds for Soviet war factories the corporation sent supplies by air to Moscow.

"The corporation draws on the varied resources of the Empire and other territories of the sterling area to meet Russian requirements. Wool is obtained from Australia, New Zealand, Syria, Iraq and Persia; metals like copper and zinc, ferrochrome and ferro-silicon from Canada; hospital tents and canvas from Palestine; mohair and tanning materials from Turkey; sisal and coffee from East Africa, and tea and rubber from Ceylon."

India, where the corporation has set up branch offices, is a major source for the supply of large numbers of goods for Russia. Jute, ground-nuts, tea, hides, shellac and tobacco are among the commodities now being supplied from India, together with a variety of manufactures ranging from cotton yarn to fire hose. One recent order alone was for 11,000,000 gunny sacks, and total runs well in excess of 45,000 tons.

Transport Lines

Goods are shipped to Karachi, and from there are sent by the overland route to the U.S.S.R. The corporation has been entrusted with the operation of the route between Nokkundi and Zahidan, together with its road connection via Meshed to the Russian East Caspian Railway.

The U.K.C.C. is also responsible for the elaborate road haulage system built up in Persia by which Anglo-American aid for Russia is transported from the Persian Gulf to the Caspian Sea. This task was assigned to the corporation within a fortnight or so of the outbreak of hostilities on the Eastern Front, when it was realized that Persia offered a relatively safe highway for supplies to Russia to supplement traffic via the northern ports and Vladivostok.

Nazis Angered With Newspapers Of the Swedes

Complain of Their "Lack of Objectivity"

STOCKHOLM, Sweden.—Nazi press spokesmen are complaining of "the lack of objectivity" shown by the newspapers of Sweden in commenting on the anniversary of the Nazi invasion of Norway. Another complaint was against front-page displays being made of reported dispatch of Swedish maps from Finland to Germany. This complaint referred to the discovery at Haparanda, Swedish - Finnish border town, of military maps covering Sweden that were in a transit shipment addressed to the German Army. A bale marked waste paper burst open, revealing the maps, dated 1940. Swedish freight workers reported the discovery to the authorities, who are investigating.

Twelve Jewish wives of Swedish subjects resident in France have been deported and are now in Sweden. One of them is Ivan Hellstroem, Russian-born wife of the director of the Paris branch of the Swedish Ball Bearing Company, whose factory in the French capital is forced to work for the Germans on a round-the-clock schedule turning out military material, particularly submarine parts.

Disregarding the protection legally accorded them by their Swedish passports, the Germans told these deportees that "because of their race" they must leave for Sweden before April 1 or they would have to wear the Star of David and become subject to deportation to the East.

Dutch Churches Again Send Strong Protest to Nazi Reichskommissar

Call Attention to Accumulation of Many Injustices Inflicted on the Country

By H. J. J. SARGINT
(North American Newspaper Alliance)

LONDON.—A bitter protest was recently presented by the combined Protestant and Roman Catholic Churches of Holland to Arthur Seyss-Inquart, the German Reichskommissar in the Netherlands, against the accumulation of injustices and the ill-treatment inflicted on the country by the occupation forces. This protest took the form of a letter of which a copy, smuggled out of the country, is now in my hands.

The signatories of this letter declare that they are compelled to approach once more the German Reichskommissar owing to the injustices committed against the people of The Netherlands. The churches, they say, both Protestant and Roman Catholic, by virtue of the mission which they have received from Christ, have raised their voices previously in protest when in matters of public life principles, having their roots in the Gospel, were being violated.

The churches now point to the increasing lawlessness, the persecution to the death of their Jewish compatriots, the fact that an outlook on life which is a flagrant violation of the Gospel is being forced upon the people, the compulsory labor service as a national socialist educational institution, the interference with freedom of Christian education, the forced labor of Dutch workers in Germany, the killing of hostages, the imprisonment of many Dutch subjects, including ministers of the church, in such conditions that an alarming number have already lost their lives in concentration camps. To this has now been added a slave hunt of young people who are rounded up and carried off by the thousands. Such act, the letter declares, constitutes a progressive violation of God's justice.

Joint Pastoral Expresses Grief

This protest to Seyss-Inquart was followed by two further important steps taken by the leaders of the Dutch churches. The Roman Catholic bishops in The Netherlands issued a joint pastoral letter expressing the bitter grief and deep anxiety of the people of the country at the harsh measures taken by the German occupation authorities and the sorrow and sympathy for the people felt by the Catholic Hierarchy. "We should be failing in our duty," the bishops declare, "if we did not raise our voice publicly in protest against the injustice to which so many of our people are subjected."

After declaring that they, in common with the representatives of the other Christian churches, had sent the letter quoted above to Seyss-Inquart, the bishops go on to say, "In these times of injustice and grief we are filled with compassion, particularly for those young people who are forcibly dragged from their parental homes and also for the Jews and our Catholic brethren born of Jewish people who have to undergo such great sufferings. We possess no temporal power. All the more do we exhort you to avail yourselves of the power which never fails in the end, namely the power of prayer to God that He may soon have pity on us and on the whole world."

The Dutch Reform Church drafted a declaration on similar lines. This was read from all pulpits of the Reform Churches at the end of February.

National Call to Resistance

Finally Queen Wilhelmina's Government in Great Britain published, simultaneously with these declarations in Holland, a national call to resistance in which perhaps the most striking passage is an admission that the Dutch Government and people failed to interpret accurately the signs of the times before the outbreak of the present war.

"For months," says the statement, "the German gang uttered wild threats against our people and our people did not understand. We continued to believe that things would not turn out too badly. We failed to take our precautions. We failed to organize our resistance. We failed to prepare ourselves for the hard and inexorable struggle which was to be forced upon us. Now we have awakened from our sleep."

The document refers in scathing terms to the action of the Germans who, in spite of their solemn assurances that students would not be put on forced labor, overran the colleges early in February in all the university cities, and dragged the students away. Not only students but other young men between the ages of eighteen and thirty were dragged from their offices and their factories.

The statement ends as follows: "Unless our people at last line up for the common struggle, the last inescapable battle, unless we resist, we shall die. He who hesitates is a deserter. He who still serves the enemy is a traitor to his country. We call on all Netherlands' subjects, men and women, to unite in general resistance. No Dutchman can any longer be in doubt where his duty lies. The Queen, the Government and the country demand every Dutchman's and Dutchwoman's determined participation in the struggle for the liberation of Holland."

Chain of Sister Towns to Aid In Difficulties

WORTHING, England (BUP).—A chain of sister towns around the world that would help each other in difficulties, is proposed by Mayor A. Chambers, of Worthing.

"The idea is that Worthing should get in touch with a comparable town in the United States, Canada, Australia and New Zealand—one in each," he said.

"I have approached the High Commissioners for the Dominions, and the American Embassy. All support the scheme.

"The High Commissioner of Canada has written suggesting the town of Guelph, Ontario, which wants to give a South Coast town a trailer kitchen. We have replied that a place like this, which is having attention from the enemy, would welcome one.

"I am hoping," Mayor Chambers added, "that the idea will develop. After the war we might extend it to Europe."

Teak From Scuttled German Ships Make Chapel Altar Rails

ROSYTH, Scotland (BUP).—The Chapel of St. Andrew's, in the Naval Dockyard at Rosyth, is truly a sailor's chapel—built by naval men of old ships steeped in naval tradition.

Twenty-five years ago German battleships that tried to beat the British Navy from the seas, came to ignominious end by scuttling when the Armistice was declared. The teak from these ships provides the altar rails.

The frame for the east window is an unknown ship's steering wheel found lying in the dockyard. The pews are built from the wood of other old ships, and the font is a ship's binnacle. All the work of building and carving was done by naval ratings and dockyard workers.

And in this chapel, with its eight stained - glass windows, there is room for a hundred worshippers. The shipyard workers use it regularly.

Germany Blocks Swedish Shipping

LONDON.—Ten Swedish ships have been blocked by the German Government from carrying out trade assignments involving South American raw materials.

British and American navicerts had been granted to the neutral vessels and cargoes, but the Germans, departing from their previous practice, withheld theirs.
